"Third Class Male"

Two-reel Century Comedy

Featuring

Chas. Dorety and Peggy Montgomery

THE village postoffice and general store is set on fire during the absence of the postmaster. When he returns with his wife and sees the flames he rushes to the firehouse, but finds all the fighters out for lunch. Next he trys to organize a volunteer bucket prigade, but this fails to check the spread of the flames.

Baby Peggy who sees the smoke and flmes rushes into the buurning building and opens the safe where the registered mail is kept. She takes the bag and safely brings Uncle Sam's property outside.

Then the baby sees a switch engine on the railroad truck near a large water tower. The tower is just far enough away from the burning building so that if the water tank on the top was overturned itt would probably put out the fire.

The baby hooks one end of a hawser to the bottom of the tank and the other end to the coupling pin on the engine. When the engineer starts up, the engine pulls the tower over and the tank crashes through the roof of the postoffice building wrecking the place. Even though the building was destroyed Baby Peggy succeeded in saving the valuable mail bag.
