"THE HEART OF AN ELEPHANT"

Zeda, after capturing "Red Fox" is sleeping in a jungle hut when a wandering tiger enters and attacks him but the giant Zulu succeeds in driving away the ferocious animal.

Bob Hagerty and Helen set out alone in search of Zeda and after a long search pick up the trail. While following the tracsk they come across the house where the wife and child of Madson's guide had stopped. Inside they find a note stating that a missionary had picked up the sick woman and her child and they were safe.

The two apes who had nursed the woman and baby see the strangers and decide to investigate. They quickly make friends and afford Bob and Helen much amusement with their mischievous antics.

A foraging party of Kaffirs see the white man and woman and attack the house from a distance with bow and arrows. Bob and Helen barricade themselves in a room just as the savages make a rush for the house. The situation is critical but the apes succeed in diverting the attention of the savages which enables Bob and Helen to escape through a window. They reach their horses and going south, reach the hut where Zeda is guarding Red Fox.

A week later, their horses having been stolen by natives, the party continues on foot. While resting, Bob takes Red Fox to a stream for a drink and accidentally loses his revolver which Red Fox secures. Bob hears a splashing up the stream and upon investigation finds it is "Old Faithful" the elephant who has been searching for his mistress, Helen. Bob goes to welcome the animal and while his back is turned, Red Fox cowardly shoots him.
