Pamela Billings, a flapper though married, lives up to every dollar of her wealthy husband's income by lavish entertainment of her friends and a weakness for racing cars. "Bill" Billings, her husband, is away from home most of the time attending auto races all over the country. During his absences, Pamela boldly carries on a flirtation with Glenn Kingdon, a wealthy sportsman with little other than social worries on his mind. Bill objects to this and there are many little "spats." Comes a time when the Billings fortune is sadly depleted by business reverses. Bill and his flapper wife have to drop out of the set they have been travelling with. He offers her a divorce but she decides to stick it out. Bill takes a job with a motor car concern and drives their car in the great auto classic of the year. Just before the race Bill is injured, but Pamela tricks him and brings his car in herself, a winner. Pamela, by this time, has more brains, and the prospects indicate "all's well."
