"Roaring Waters"

Two-reel Western

Featuring

George Larkin and Josephine Hill

CONSTABLE JERRY BURKE, of the Northwest Mounted Police, finds Sergt. Phillips sorely beset by a gang. Jerry drives the men off. Phillips has been badly wounded. The only trace of the gang is a torn piece of mackinaw clenched in one of the Sergeant's hands. Jerry takes the wounded man to town. The Sergeant loses his memory and does not know who attacked him.

In the town, Mattice, McPherson is the factor. His daughter Margot is in love with Jerry. tSopping with them is an alleged fur dealer, Roberts.

Jerry leaves to take the Sergeant to headquarters. He tells Margot she will hear from him. Roberts makes love to her, but is repulsed. He goes away. A message comes to Margot from Jerry, telling her to meet him and they will be arried. She steals away at night, fearing to ask her father's approval. She is missed the next day, but has left a message with McPherson's man, Jacques, that she has gone to visit her aunt. Jerry comes back and is sorry not to see her. They are discussing her when the aunt arrives. McPherson asks her where Margot is. The aunt has not seen her. She has, however, found Margot's pocketbook, dropped outside the house when the girl's suitcase broke open. In it is the message supposedly from Jerry. The latter knows nothing of it. Then Jacques comes in, wearing the mackinaw from which Sergeant Phillips had torn a piece in his last struggle. Jerry recognizes it. Jacques says that Roberts gave it to him before he went away. Jerry suspects Roberts is responsible for the girl's disappearance. He sets out after Roberts.

Beanwhile Margot has gone to meet Jerry. But she finds, instead, that she is trapped by Roberts. A man rides in and warns Roberts that an officer is coming. Romerts sets out in a buckboard with Margot. This breaks down and they resort to a canoe. Roberts loses his paddle and they are in danger of going over the falls. Jerry effects a sensational rescue, bringing Roberts to justice and saving the girl.
