"HIDING IN HOLLAND" - One Reel

In 1918 after the armistice the German Government decided to put over something good on the world and made an arrangement with a live-wire picture man to let the world in on the bright spots in the career of the Crown Price, unhappily confined on the Island of Wieringen, Holland.

The cameraman successfully camouflaged his machine in the back of a two-wheeled cart with the lense projecting thru a hole very slyly cut in the back of the hood. By this means he was able to show many incidents in the life of the Crown Prince that are illuminating to say the least. We see him being assisted on to his dangerous bicycle by a powerful gentleman friend and hear him engage in some snappy conversation with this same self-sacrificing friend. Later he borrows five dollars from the burgomaster and then indulges in the most appropriate fade-out ever accorded royalty.
