"His Unlucky Berth"

One-reel Star Comedy

K. A. FLOPPE flirts with Mrs. Jock Simpsey at an amusement park, but changes his mind when he sees how large Hubby is. However, after husband has left, Floppe continues to pay his attentions to Wifey. Jock sees him and follows after with murder in his eye. After many amusing escapes Floppe is caught by Hubby, given a drubbing and warned to leave town by the next train.

A telegram calls the Simpseys out of town and they happen to take the same train. While Hubby is in the smoker that night, the train takes a turch and Floppe is rolled out of his bunk. A passerby helps him into the nearest berth—Mrs. Simpsey is asleep in it—where he is discovered by the irate Jock, given another trouncing and thrown back into his own berth.

While Jock is asleep his ticket is blown out of his berth and into Floppe's pocket. The next morning in the washroom Floppe, his eyes smarting from soapsuds, bumps into Simpsey and is given a punch in the jaw that leaves his dazed. The conductor finds his in that condition and, reading the name on the ticket in Floppe's pocket leads him back to Mrs. Jock's berth. Hubby finds him there and chases him through the train.

Climbing to the roof of the train, Floppe is still pursued by Hubby. To avoid a further beating, Floppe jumps off the front end of the train-roof to the top of a station shed. He is no sooner settled there when a station agent, hosing the roof of the shed, washes him off the shed. Floppe makes a frenzied jump through one of the windows of the passing train and again lands in Mrs. Jock's erth.

Hubby finds him there and another battle is started. Explanations are forthcoming, however, and Floppe's offer of half of his prescription for hootch goes a long way to soothing Hubby's ruffled feelings.
