"THE MILLIONTH CHANCE"

To warn Nancy of a danger threatening her, Hutch is forced to follow her to New York on another train. Nancy and Ann are the guests of Marlow at his suburban home, the Towers.

Ann secures the silver scarf, but she gives it to Marlow when he tells her that he will tell Nancy that Ann stole it. But they cannot see the thread that tells the secret.

To prevent Nancy signing the big paper contract, Marlow locks her in her room. Hutch arrives, is told Nancy is asleep, and is invited to stay for the night. He, too, is locked in. When he hears Nancy pounding at her door, he lowers himself from his window, which is over the river, on a rope of sheets and swings, pendulum fashion, until he can grasp a tree and reach the ground.

The police see him climbing a trellis to Nancy's window, and a terrific fight ensues. Realizing the presence of the police assures Nancy's safety, Hutch decides on a quick getaway. He dives out the window into the river, swims across, and evades his pursuers by rolling under a moving freight train, transferring himself from the top of a moving train to a bridge, and swinging across a street on a rope. There, however, he is met by more police and roustabouts, who overwhelm him.
