SEP -7 1921 ©CL 16941 SPOT CASH -- By Hal E. Roach

The comedy opens showing "Snub" as the proprietor of the "Spot Cash" Grocery, where everything in the store is fresh--including the boss. Marie Mosquini is the cashier, and Noah Young, the clerk of the hard-boiled variety. The Hot Stove Gang sit around the heater and discuss the important goings-on of the nation. Pollard is finally angered by the methods of his clerk, and fires him, whereupon the clerk announces that he will open up a rival establishment next door. The store is opened, and the clerk gets his supply of goods from the front of his former boss's store. But customers arrive who desired canned goods, so the new proprietor cuts a whole through the wall and moves the canned goods from "Snub's" store to the shelves of his own. A lower scale of prices in the new establishment takes away Pollard's customers and when he sees his stock disappearing from his shelves into the next-door store he determines to start something. To do this, he starts a fire and calls the fire department. In the excitement, the firemen all carry the goods to safety back into "Snub's" store, and all is well again.
