Alphonse Kelly and his wife run a modiste shop and have the extra burden of the wife's brother who is good for nothing. Kelly is always very much attracted by his customers. In fact, almost anything in skirts appeals to him.

While Kelly is out flirting with a neighbor's maid, a bride and groom come into the shop. Not being able to wait longer for Kelly's return, they leave a photograph of the bride on which she has written: "I love only you"and requests that Kelly duplicate the gown shown in the photo. Kelly's wife gets the photo and immediately accuses him of flirting with other women.

Good news comes to the Kelly household in the form of a letter telling that the brother is to marry a millionairess, but peace does not last long for a new model is engaged and makes a great hit with Kelly and also with the brother who immediately falls in love.

To teach Kelly a lesson, the brother gets the model to agree to meet Kelly at a cafe that night. Then phones to Mrs. Kelly that her husband is flirting at the cafe. Kelly does some very clever maneuvering, getting out of the tight situation, by his brother-in-law and the model, informing the wife that Kelly was present to give his blessing to their being married.
