SYNOPSIS OF THE STORY

Neil Shipman's unusual [illegible] for animals prompted [illegible] to write "A Bear, a Boy and a Dog," the two reel [illegible] presented by W. H. Clune and directed by Bert Van Tuyle.

In brief, the story deals with one little chap, tired of school books and study, who starts out in quest of excitement and adventure as a Pirate.

In the woods he finds a Scotch Collie and annexes the canine to his troubles. A little further up the road they find a baby bear, just escaped from a nearby zoo. The three affiliate and start on a little tour of the boy's home.

The boy's mother has hidden twenty dollars in a vase. Same was the monthly rent. The bear and dog make quick speed in ransacking the house and turn everything topsy-turvy inside. Unknown to all, are two burglars in the attic of the home. They have successfully looted the boy's home. Upon the mother's return the bear, the boy and the dog make a hurried exit. The boy leaps out of the window in full gaze of some suspicious neighbors.

In the woods the boy, bear and dog encounter the robbers and cleverly trap them and effect their capture.

When the boy returns he is accused of stealing, when a friendly judge appears on the scene and explains that the boy has been rewarded for returning his animal friends to their respective owners.
