NOV-2 '21

The picture opens introducing Dr. Allan Lang, a young man who is enjoying his vacation in the woods. By accident, Bob Stickney, a guide is severely injured, and the Doctor saves him from becoming a cripple for life. It is then disclosed that the physician is in love and loved by Lana Candage, an heiress, who, however, must be married by her father's consent and in his presence to win her heritage, Old Candage does not approve of the match, favoring Mortimer Totten.

Lana inveigles her father to visit the lumber camp so that she may see Lang, but the Doctor has returned to the city. As soon as he heare that she is resting with her father in the timber lands, he immediately decides to return and win her. Lang returns but diplomatically does not go to the same camp as the Candages. Old Candage is taken ill and Lana, seeing her chance, sends for her doctor sweetheart.

In the meantime, Bob Stickney, the guide, has watched the young people, and because of gratitude to the doctor decides to help them out. Old Candage remains unshaken in favoring Totten and Lang refuses to let the girl sacrifice her estate by eloping with him. Finally Bob hits upon a scheme that is laughably carried out in which the father of Lana consents in the marriage, and the very deed is done then and there before his eyes.
