SANTA Fe moseys up Main Street, Calient, and there gets into an altercation with an Itaian who has a dancing bear and a boy of eight or ten. He emerges minus his blanket roll and plus the kid, Pardner, and rfom then on their adventures begin, ending when they are are thrown into jail

Rufus B. Coulter, the banker, who is in love with Annette. Coulter's employee, Dick Farwell, is in love with Stella, Annette's sister.

Lately there has geen an influx of gun-men and desperadoes into Caliente County. The sheriff is powerless to break up the gang, secreted in the painted cliffs, a forbidding region in the north end of the country. It is soon disclosed that Coulter is the one who is secretly responsible for conditions of lawlessness.

It is also disclosed that Coulter's bank is short, and the arrival of the bank examiner is imminent. Coulter must find a dupe. His eye falls on Dick Farwell, whom he calls into his office and sends on a fool's errand to the painted cliffs, which ends in the boy's capture by the outlaws. The bank examiner suspects Farwell of absconding.

Meanwhile Santa Fe has found a place as porter in the bank, but in the sinister activities that connect Coulter with the painted cliffs it is seen that Santa Fe is more than an ordnary porter. He suspects Coulter and finds proof that Coulter is connected with the gan[illegible]

Santa Fe accumulates his evidence of [illegible] guilt. Meanwhile Caliente has grown indignan[illegible] Fraser's failure to round up the outlaws. He is wounded in a fracas with several members of the gang, but starts out alone to bring Dick Farwell, his daughter's sweetheart, back. Santa Fe knows his peril and starts out in pursuit. A terrific sand storm comes. Santa Fe saves the sheriff's life and sends him back to town. When morning comes he digs himself out. He sees a body of riders pass and vanish miraculously through a waterfall. Following them he finds himself in the stronghold of the outlaws. In one of the subterranean caverns he finds young Farwell, gaunt and haggard from his imprisonment. One chance of escape for them is through a subterranean river that flows beneath the cavern and Santa Fe takes the chance.

Meanwhile a mob prepares to tar and feather the sheriff and drive him out of town. Santa Fe arrives and saves Fraser by revealing that he himself is a U. S. Secret Service agent sent to uproot the gang. He tells of Farwell's plight and of the bandit's stronghold and the mob, led by Sheriff Fraaser, starts for the painted cliffs.

At daybreak the bandit's stronghold is besieged, but the attackers, outnumbered, soon face annihilation. A call for help is sent to the nearest military outpost and at nightfall, just as the beleagured posse is about to be overcome, the U. S. Cavalry rides across the plains and takes the painted cliffs by storm.

Coulter is captured by Caliente. Santa Fe, alias Robert Carson, wins Annette and little Pardner is assured of a good home.
