"The Piskaninny" gives "Sunshine Sammy" full opportunity to exhibit his keen sense of comedy in the role of "Little Casino". Hal Roach has generously surrounded his young luminary with a splendid cast of fun-makers. Joseph White is seen as The Camper; Ethel Broadhurst, the well-known musical comedy beauty, is seen as the camper's wife; George Rowe, the "cross-eyed gink", appears as Officer Snoopey; and screen credit is also given to one baby, a bear, a chicken, several trout, a can of angleworms, and fourteen million mosquitos.

The comedy opens showing the camper and his wife looking for a quiet trout stream to pitch camp and enjoy their vacation. When the bait runs out, the camper hies himself to a nearby grocery store to replenish his supply. Here he encounters "Sunshine Sammy", as "Little Casino", the grocery boy, and immediately the fun commences. Sammy returns to the trout stream with the camper and endeavors to show him the art of trout fishing. "Fire-nose" Flannigan, a comic inebriate invades the camp, followed by Officer Snoopey, and an uproarious entangle-
