©CIL 17315 TR WEASEL DEC -6 1921

Bill and Bob are first s[illegible]g a morning stroll down a country road. They meet a farmer who is mourning over the loss of his chickens. As he blames it all upon the weasels, which are known to enjoy the feathered delicacy, the boys put up a business proposition with him, promising to rid his farm of the barnyard pests. Unusual closeups of the weasel are then shown, disclosing the fact that the weasel in size and shape is similar to the ermine, and in the winter the fur turns white. In fact, some of the finest ermine coats are made from the fur of the weasel.

That night the boys place traps in the immediate vicinity of the hen-coop and wait to pounce upon their prey. While they are in hiding with their faithful dog, "Rags", a dusky intruder visits the chicken-coop, and after a chase is brought to a halt by "Rags". The "coon" is suspected of being the real ravager of the farmer's barnyard, and after promising to quit the "poultry business", is freed. The next morning, however, the boy's efforts are rewarded, as a number of weasels are found imprisoned in the traps which were set for them.
