LOSE NO TIME.

By Hal Roach.

"Snub" wanted a raise in salary, buthe lacked the courage to ask for it. Again was prohibition to blame -- for the moral stimulus which needed exhilaration was not given the proper spiritual assistance. At last, desperately, he enters the boss's office and is greatly surprised at the cheerful manner in which he is received, and with the result that the boss is much elated to find himself being asked to a real home dinner at Snub's home.

With the acceptance came additional troubles for Snub because he really did like to do things upround. Carefully from the deepest and darkest corner of the wardrobe, Snub drew his most reasure possession, the best covered bottle of vintage of 1902. At last, and a-lack he stumbles and smashes his precious liquid in the fireplace. How to provide another was the question, and that is told in a rapid series of side-splitting incidents which wind up in his successful outcome and the securing of a high proof substitute which brought about the desired results and the looked-for raise in salary.
