The story concerns Buell Arnister, Jr., a young man who prefers to be a poverty-stricken artist than to become a partner in his father's law office. Unable to pay his studio rent, he is ejected to the roof and from then on is a roof dweller. He finally travels by roof to a beautiful dwelling which is vacant, the owner being on a trip to Europe and takes up his quarters therein. Then he meets the girl, another roof dweller, whose dead father formerly owned the very house in which he has stationed himself, the girl having been disowned in the father's will through the wicked influence of her stepmother. While in the house, Buell finds a note referring to another will, made by the father, which leaves everything to the girl. The stepmother returns home from Europe, married to a Count, and things begin to look bad when Buell reveals the note finds the will and the house and all properties are restored to the girl.
