" TRACKS "

By L. V. Jefferson

APR 27 '22

A $1000 reward is offered for the capture of horse thieves, who have puzzled the community by the presence of cow tracks in every trail of horses stolen. Leon Serrano, the deputy sheriff, is loud in assertions that he will catch the thieves.

Leon is really leader of the bandits, and it is on his horse that false cloven hoofs are attached. Leon is bold enough to love Elicia, daughter of the wealthiest ranchman. He has a new and dangerous rival in Norman Draper, a Texas ranger sent to round up the thieves.

Realizing the community will demand a victim, Leon arrests an old man who has innocently bought a stolen horse from the thieves. The cowboys are about to lynch him when he is recognized by Draper and spectacularly rescued from hanging.

From the old man the ranger learns the direction the thieves took, and they are captured. It is learned that Leon Serrano is their leader, and he is arrested by Draper, who wins the reward and gives it to the poor old man. Draper feels sufficiently rewarded in the love of Elicia.
