By Hal E. Roach.

Mother had a large family and with the death of father, the four sons attempt to run the horse-shoeing business which was their heritage. The only daughter seeking wider experience, goes to town and marries. With the advent of the new son-in-law, mother declares in honor of the new "dead one" in the family, that a holiday be enjoyed. It is around this holiday that thefunny and humorous situations are created by the mischief-loving sons who initiate the new member to their hearts content and almost physical disability, but he recovers in time luckily, to become a regular member of the family.
