"OH, BILLY"
A Billy West Comedy.

Synopsis.

Billy is in love with the daughter of a retired merchant. The scene opens with the father on the Board Walk attracted by a shell game operated by the villain.

The owner of the stall permits the old man to win the first time and just as he does so the daughter comes up with her arms full of dolls and as soon as the villain sees her and finds she is the old man's daughter he lets the old man win a pile of money. Just then Billy comes up and greets the girl affectionately upon which the villain gets sore and immediately plans to do Billy up.

The old man, his daughter and the villain proceed down the Board Walk to another booth and they have a game of throwing hoops around the necks of live ducks. The girl tries her hand without success and Billy comes up and rings two ducks for her. They all go on down the Board Walk, the ducks escape and the pursuit of the ducks by Billy and the villain affords a number of new comedy situations.

The father favors the villain's suit and orders Billy out upon which Billy decides he doesn't want to live any longer and tries to commit suicide by several means none of which are successful. He at last rigs up a contrivance composed of dynamite, an axe, a shotgun and various other deadly weapons, lights the fuse and sits down to await the end when the girl who is searching for him drives up and rushes in the room and throws her arms around his neck. Just then the fuse burns out and there is an explosion after which they are seen with their clothing ripped and their faces badly blackened by the dynamite. However all ends well.
