CAMP LIFE BORROWS.

Distressing Experiences in the Lovely Hemmer Woods.

SCRANTON, Aug. 23.—Two Scranton sportsmen went up to Newton Lake a few days ago to fish for black bass. There are no wooded shores on the little natural mountain pond, and the fishermen pitched their tent near a nice spring in a pasture field on the east side of the lake, intending to stay there for at least a week. They caught a lot of bass in the afternoon, and at night they tied up the boat and put the oars in the tent. At about 2 o'clock one of the fishermen was aroused out of a sound sleep by a loud bellowing and a great stamping of feet on the other side of the canvas from where he was lying. He turned out, lighted a torch, and was going to see what kind of a creature it was that roared so, when the head and horns of a big Holstein bull were thrust through the tent directly over his cot. The startled sportsman grabbed up an oar and gave the bull a tremendous thump on the nose, and the enraged brute bellowed louder than ever, flew around to the other side of the tent, and poked another hole in it before the fisherman had a chance to make another move.

By this time the other sportsman had waked up, and the two started in to maul the bull over the head with the oars. The mad beast had made the tent look as though a cyclone had struck it, and he kept ripping it till the men had pounded him so hard that he was glad to retreat across the field. Then the fishermen lugged their tent and the lined to it to a piece of meadow land over the fence, several rods away, and when daylight came they pitched up the canvas. Come to find out, the farmer had turned the ugly bull into the lot after dark, simply because the fishermen had not asked him if they might camp on his land.

Four Lackawanna Valley young men started to camp out for a week on the shores of Lake Henry not long ago. At Goulds boro they hired a big sorrel horse and a grocer's wagon, packed their tent and provisions in the wagon, and sallied forth for the lake, four miles distant. One of the campers drove the horse and the others cut across the fields and woods on foot. The driver had the hardest end of the job, for the horse had a crazy fit in the way, became unmanageable, left the load, and went kiting through a stumpy field. As the wagon bounded over roots and rocks, the seat slipped from the sideboards, and the driver slid to the bottom of the box, braced his feet against the dashboard and did his best to stop the runaway nag. He couldn't do anything with the crazy horse, though, and the vehicle went swaying and twisting among the stumps. A lot of matches were set on fire by the bumping of the wheels, a hole was burned in the tent, and some other things were damaged.

Finally the horse ran the wagon between two stumps, and got stuck. That gave the driver a chance to stamp the fire out and save the rest of the load. While he was doing it the horse pawed into a rotten log and disturbed a big nest of bumblebees, and the angry insects sailed out and stung the horse till he tried to run away again. At sight of the bees the driver leaped it to a safe distance, and while he was gone the horse kicked itself clear of the wagon, and went snorting and cantering off to a piece of woods. After waiting a good while at the lake for the tent and provisions to arrive, the three campers went in search of the driver. They found him sitting on a stump twenty rods from the wagon, where he explained things in a graphic manner. Then the four campers beat the bumblebees to death with bushes, caught the horse, fixed up the harness, and drove to the lake with their damaged outfit.

Some Wilkesbarre campers on Tunkahanna Creek stole an armful of roasting ears from a farmer's cornfield one night last week. The irate farmer caught them at it, and he told the festive fellows in strong, rustic language that if they undertook to hook any more of his corn he would make them remember him as long as they lived. They didn't believe he meant what he said, and so they stole some more on the following night. They believe him now, for a gun cracked twice just as they were leaving the field, and their legs began to smart. The fine shot in their flesh didn't permit them to sleep much that night, and the episode caused them to break camp before the sun was up.

CARE OF THE CAR HORSES.

They Have Been Well Looked After and Few Have Been Overcome by the Heat.

The long-route street-car companies have been taking unusual precautions against the effects of the summer heat. This came about not so much through the losses of previous years as through the sharp warnings of the first hot days. The first day of the July warm wave ten horses dropped in the traces of Broadway cars and an almost equal number on the Third avenue route. The superintendents at once organized a system of prevention. As a result of this probably none will lose any more horses.

The Third avenue line has been the heaviest loser. About fifteen of their horses died from the effects of overheating. The preventive measures taken by this road are now the most perfect. Their 1,800 horses are arranged so that each pair makes two trips a day, divided so that there is a rest between each half a trip. Relays of horses are established at Chatham square, Sixth street, Twenty-eighth street, Forty-seventh street, Fifty-sixth street, Ninetieth street, Ninety-eighth street, and Harlem. The stables at Sixty-fifth street are counted as the dividing line between the halves of the trips. Each team is expected to make two of the short trips. The reduction of the number of short trips only applies to the early evening box cars, and is only half what it was last summer. Drivers are instructed to watch the horses carefully, and to look out for the least sign of exhaustion. If a horse shows signs of suffering from the heat he is sent to the hundred-acre pasturage which the company owns near the Morris Park five-mile track. About forty horses have been up there for periods of a week or ten days during the summer.

The superintendent of the stables of the Broadway and Seventh avenue lines said yesterday that they had lost but ten horses during the summer, although three of them had been overcome by the heat. There are about 2,000 horses in these stables, and the work is divided so that the team which makes one trip one day makes two the next, and then one again the third day. The preventive system on these two lines cost a lot in care in watching of the horses and in giving them plenty of water. The superintendent said: "These horses that are overcome by the heat are overcome because of the stopping of perspiration. If you give a horse plenty of water to drink he will respire freely, and will not suffer nearly so much from the heat." The Broadway line has reserves of horses at the Batter-st. at Canal street, and at Thirteenth street.

The Sixth avenue line has not lost a single horse, nor has it had one overcome by the heat. Foreman Wallace attributes this to careful feeding and to careful attention to the horses between trips. There are 1,100 horses in the Sixth avenue stables, and each team makes two trips a day.

In all the stables the treatment of horses suffering from the heat is practically the same. They are sponged vigorously, and their heads are cooled by drenching with water. Cold water, too, is applied to the jugular veins. If a horse is badly prostrated, it will take a week to get him thoroughly into condition. The hot stables of the city are not favorable to recuperation, and in this respect the Third avenue line has the advantage over the others.

MANY TROPHIES FOR NEW YORKERS,

Including a Linen Duster for the Hottest Fireman in Line at Watertown.

WATERTOWN, Aug. 23.—The judges chosen to make awards of special prizes at the Firemen's Convention in this city yesterday were so late making their reports that in nearly every case the winners got out of town before the decisions were announced. The New York veterans and volunteers came in for several of the special prizes. A silver ice pitcher was awarded them as the finest appearing company in line in respect of uniform, general demeanor, and personnel. In addition, they get a pair of lanterns for having the largest band (Cappa's). William H. Duley of the veterans won a linen duster as the hottest fireman in line. The New York Volunteer Association won the case of champagne by having the largest number of men in line, three jugs of Erin-go-bragh for the handsomest hand engine, and a muckenbush rifle for the finest banner. Steve O'Brien of the Volunteers was put down as the handsomest fireman at the convention and had several pairs of collars and cuffs added to his wardrobe. The Brooklyn Excelsiors had the finest looking drum major and came the longest distance.

The winners who left before the awards were announced can get their prizes by applying to the Hon. Ro-well P. Flower, Chairman of the Watertown Citizens' Committee.

Drowned while Fishing.

RAHWAY, Aug. 23.—Thos. Athly and C. Suddenstick hired a boat at Crane's boat house to go fishing in the Rahway River on Thursday. Nothing was heard of them until to-day when at noon the bodies of the two men were found floating near the staten island shore, opposite Rahway River. The boat had probably been run down by a passing steamer.

Improvements in a Well-known Museum.

Doris Museum, on Eighth avenue, will open next week after undergoing extensive alterations and repairs. The decorations are of the Romanesque Egyptian and Greek order, something Manager Doris claims cannot be seen in any other public place of amusement on this continent.
