Municipal Theatre

THE St. Louis Municipal Theatre is situated in Forest Park, on the steep bank of the River Des Peres, whose slope is well adapted to the location of seats. It was built in 1916, two years after the great Pageant of St. Louis, to whose stimulus its existence is directly due. It was felt that a permanent location for performances on a somewhat smaller scale would be a distinct asset to the city. With the approval of the Park Department, this location was chosen by the Pageant Drama Association for its performance of "As You Like It," with which the theatre was opened on June 5, 1916, the principal performers being Miss Margaret Anglin, Mr. Robert Mantell and Mr. Frederick Lewis.

A year later the city placed the theatre on a permanent basis, building a stage, a concrete auditorium, and erecting at the top an ornamental colonnade. Since this time the following performances have been held:

September 1, 1916— Pied Piper of Hamelin.	August 13-22, 1917— Fashion Show.
June 4, 1917— Aida.	August 30, 1917— Rip Van Winkle.
June 30, 1917— Masonic Celebration.	September 17, 1917— Pageant Choral Concert.
July 4, 1917— Navy League Celebration.	May 28-June 1, 1918— Greek Games, Central High School.
July 23-30, 1917— Paoliacci.	June 10, 1918— Red Cross Performance, Y. W. C. A.

The auditorium has a depth of 256 feet, an average width of 225 feet, with a total seating capacity of 9,270. It is now constructed entirely of reinforced concrete, and portable chairs are used for seats. The exits are so arranged that the auditorium can be emptied in from ten to twenty minutes.

Everyone in the audience has a free, unobstructed view of the stage, and the voices of the singers and speakers have carried satisfactorily in every performance so far held.

The stage proper is built upon the banks of the River Des Peres, in the midst of a dense shrubbery plantation. Two large oaks about seventy feet high form a proscenium arch at its front. Between it and the audience is an orchestra pit, 10 to 18 feet wide, which will accommodate an orchestra of 150. The difference in the elevation of this pit and that of the farthest row of seats in the auditorium is 53 feet. The stage has a total width of 120 feet and is 90 feet deep to a bridge leading across the little river to the dressing rooms, which are in buildings hidden in the shrubbery. This bridge is so located that it may at times be used effectively in connection with the stage in spectacular performances.

The lighting is by electricity, and the scheme is usually studied out for each performance, both large searchlights and smaller lights being used as required.

The theatre is open for the use of the people of St. Louis for holding civic entertainments of all kinds, but may not be used at any time for the purpose of obtaining revenue. All profits from the use of the theatre must go toward embellishing the theatre and these profits are being used to install complete lighting devices, concrete ornamentation and comforts for those who use the theatre.

The Pilgrimage of Liberty

Part I.

THIS part depicts certain episodes in the struggle between Liberty and Autocracy that has been going on since the beginning of the world. The action begins in the twilight, which discloses the Temple of Liberty, around which a group of maidens and children move in procession. The procession changes to a dance and to a chorus in praise of the Goddess of Liberty, who shortly appears from her temple. In a conversation between the goddess and the leading spirits of her train the age-long struggle between Liberty and Autocracy is described. At its close Autocracy himself, seated on his throne, is dimly disclosed by a light that grows brighter as the action proceeds.

The slaves of Autocracy and the spirits of Liberty challenge each other in a spirited chorus. Then Autocracy and Liberty themselves lay down the principles that guide them. Soon in the central space of the stage shines a vision of Leonidas and his Greeks fighting for European civilization at the Pass of Thermopylae. The Persians attack them, they are betrayed by a traitorous Greek and are finally overcome. Autocracy rejoices, but Liberty makes it clear that these men, in dying as they did, aided her cause.

Again in the central space shines another vision, that of the signing of the Great Charter in England, by King John. Autocracy points out that the king signed with intention to break his oath; but Liberty declares that, despite this, the charter has stood fast.

Again a vision. This time of the City of New York at the beginning of the Revolution. A messenger brings to George Washington the news of the Declaration of Independence. The people rejoice, and drag from its pedestal the statue of King George III. Liberty and Autocracy again discuss the issue.

Another vision discloses the siege and destruction of the Bastille in Paris at the beginning of the French Revolution. Autocracy points out that this was but the prelude to the reign of Napoleon, but Liberty reminds him that this reign was short lived.

The final vision is the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation by Abraham Lincoln, in Washington. Liberty here appears and rejoices, but Autocracy and his slaves again assert themselves and at the end of the act they sweep from the altar its fire and its trophies, following the leading spirits into the temple. The lights slowly die down on the work of ruin, but at the end a pale glow illuminates the Spirit of Liberty, unscathed.

The Drawing of the Sword

Part II.

ON the stage stand three high thrones. Truth, Justice and Liberty enter, Truth taking the central throne. After they have greeted one another the warring nations enter, one by one, with appropriate attendants, to plead their reasons for entering the war, and to call on Truth, Justice and Liberty to aid their cause.

First comes Servia, followed by a banner and a group of Servian men. When he has pleaded his cause and Truth has bidden him unsheathe his sword, the tragic figure of stricken Belgium is seen approaching with her impoverished people. Truth greets her, "Hail! Mother of heroes!" After she has told her tale, Justice asks, "Who will defend this land?" and as an answer England and France enter with their attendant banners. England is a man of the Elizabethan age; France is a slender girl in the character of Joan of Arc. The two agree to fight for Belgium. The Marseillaise is heard; but all at once it changes to the Russian National Anthem and Russia appears in the imperial robes of the Romanoffs. He stands with his back to Liberty and salutes only Truth and Justice.

England now calls to his standard his people from the far frontiers. In response come Canada, India and Australia, with their groups, followed shortly by Japan; and then by Armenia, unattended, who kneels before the throne of Justice. Then to the tune of the Garibaldi hymn Italy enters, clad as a soldier of the Bersaglieri. He asks pardon for his one-time alliance with Germany and Austria, and Liberty declares that he is once more received into favor. Then to Chopin's Funeral March, Poland moves slowly to the front, veiled in black; but soon the black garb is cast aside and she stands young and glowing in a robe of rose and blue. Finally Portugal and Roumania enter.

In response to the call of Truth the nations now briefly tell of their disasters at the hands of the foe: England, of his sinking ships; Russia, of the waving line of ruin; Belgium, of her tears; Servia, of her lost kingdom, and France, of her dead children. In response, Liberty and Justice call to America, and as they call there is a tumult in the Russian group, the imperial figure staggers and falls, and a new Russia, as a girl, makes her appearance. Truth and Liberty claim her as their own and agree to protect her. Still the outlook is dark and the nations lament until the sound of martial trumpets is heard and the stage is filled with American soldiers. America salutes her comrades, and pledges that she will not sheathe the sword until victory over Autocracy is won. The Star Spangled Banner is sung and the Pageant ends.

History of the Episodes

Part I.

(480 B. C.)

The Persians, a mighty Asiatic nation, made several attempts to conquer the Greeks, a small group of European tribes. To the failure of these attempts is due the fact that we are living today under European instead of Asiatic civilization. During one of the attacks the vast army of Persians was met by a small band of Greeks, under Leonidas, King of Sparta, in the narrow pass of Thermopylae, between the mountains and the sea. They held their ground until a traitorous Greek led the Persians over the mountains to the rear and then all fell fighting.

(The Great Charter.) (June 19, 1215.)

Angry at the tyranny of King John of England, the barons of the kingdom and the dignitaries of the church forced him to sign a charter of liberties, which is still a part of the British Constitution and which guaranteed such fundamental rights as trial by jury.

(July 4, 1776.)

The Declaration was adopted by representatives of the various colonies in Congress assembled, in Philadelphia, on July 4, 1776. On the 9th the Declaration was acclaimed in New York, and the crowd pulled down the statue of the British king, which stood on the bowling green in that city. This bowling green still exists as a small park at the lower part of Manhattan Island. The statue, which was made of lead, was transported to the house of Oliver Wolcott, a patriot leader, at Litchfield, Conn., and there melted into bullets by the women of his household and their friends for the use of the Continental Army.

(July 14, 1789.)

The Bastille, a fortress of the city of Paris, belonging to the French kings, had been used for many years as a place of imprisonment for the objects of his tyranny, and hence was regarded by the people as the stronghold of despotism. At the beginning of the French Revolution the people of Paris attacked the fortress, forced it to surrender and liberated its prisoners, shortly after razing the whole structure to the ground. Where it stood is now a public square, the Place de la Bastille.

(Jan. 1, 1863.)

Abraham Lincoln, by virtue of his power as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, decreed as a military measure the emancipation of all slaves in the seceded states, and his proclamation was signed in Washington on January 1, 1863. The adoption shortly after of the Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States gave his act the force of a constitution law and extended it throughout the whole country.

To Arms, O Men of America!

Let the spirit of George Washington guide you in supporting your Government in this unprecedented war against tyranny and terror and oppression!

Awake, O Women of America!

Be inspired by the patriotic spirit of Joan of Arc, who led the men of France to victory as you shall encourage our brave American lads to free the world from the barbarism of the Hun!

On this anniversary of the birth of our country, of the birth of that Liberty which has opened wide the eyes of the world—O men and women of America, give thanks to God that you are on the side of Right, Justice and Freedom, and serve Him and your posterity by doing your ALL for the cause of humanity!

(July 28, 1914.)

The great European war was begun by the demand of Austria upon Serbia that she do certain things to atone for the murder of an Austrian prince, at which Austria claimed that Serbia had connived. To agree to these demands would have been equivalent to the sacrifice of her independence, and she therefore refused. Austria thereupon attacked her.

(August 2, 1914.)

Russia took up the cause of her sister Slav state, Serbia. Germany, the ally of Austria, declared war on Russia and repaired by a quick attack to overwhelm Russia's ally, France. All the nations of Europe, including Germany, had agreed to respect the neutrality of Belgium in case of war, but, despite this, Germany demanded passage through that country. When it was refused she proceeded to take it by force, overwhelming the little country as she did so and disregarding what had always been considered the laws of civilized warfare.

(August 5, 1914)

In response to the violation of Belgium, England declared war on Germany and rushed the few troops that she had to the Continent, where they fought side by side with the French to stem the German tide of invasion, finally turning it back at the River Marne when it had nearly reached Paris.

(August 6, 1914.)

Russia, with her huge armies, fought bravely at first and gained many successes over the Germans. But Russia herself was an autocracy, decayed at the core. It was reported that the Czar and his friends were not averse to making a separate peace with Germany. Thereupon the people overthrew the throne and established a republic.

It was expected by the Germans that if England entered the war, all her colonies, bound to her by feeble ties, would break away and establish their own independence. But although the governmental ties were feeble, those of sentiment were strong, and the English colonies and dependencies have fought loyally at her side in the war.

(August 23, 1914.)

Japan, England's ally, entered the war with her and has conquered Germany's colonies in the east. She now stands ready to help still further when she receives the word.

Armenia, a Christian Asiatic people of ancient civilization, has always been persecuted by the Turks, of whose empire it forms a part. The Turk, in alliance with Germany, has endeavored to exterminate this entire people and has actually killed them by thousands.

History of the Episodes

Part II.

(August 21, 1915.)

Before the war Italy was joined with Austria and Germany in what was known as the Triple Alliance. Each country bound itself to aid the others in a defensive war; but Italy, rightly contending that Germany and Austria were attacking other nations and not defending themselves, broke from the Alliance and took its stand by the side of France and England, demanding among other things that Austria should return to it the Italian provinces still held by that empire.

Poland, once an independent kingdom, was dismembered by Russia, Germany and Austria, between which empires its territory was distributed. At the beginning of the war all these nations offered to Poland the reconstruction of its ancient kingdom. The Poles evidently doubted the good faith of Germany and Austria and they have been found in great numbers fighting on the side of the Allies.

(March 9, 1916.)

Portugal has of late years been closely associated with England, and entered the war on the side of the Allies.

The Roumanian people are closely connected by blood with the Italians, being descended from the soldiers of the Emperor Trajan, who conquered and settled in that part of Europe, then called Dacia. They entered the war on the side of the Allies. They were at first successful, but were shortly overrun by the German troops.

(April 6, 1917.)

The events connected with our own entry into the war are so recent and so vividly present in the recollections of all who see this Pageant that it is unnecessary to rehearse them here. The Germans attacked us while we were at peace with them and refused reparation. They conspired with our neighbors to invade and injure us. They have dreams of world dominion, which could not be carried out without our destruction as a nation. We had no course but to take up arms, and having taken them up, we shall not lay them down until the ideas of liberty, which are as the breath of our bodies, triumph over those of autocracy, with which we are contending.

There Are Patriots Who Save and Patriots Who Rave

Said Patriot-who-saves: "I believe this war will be won by working and saving, and I'm doing both. I have already bought Liberty Bonds and Thrift Stamps, and I'm building up a National Bank of Commerce Savings Account to buy some more. Right now I'm going down to deposit some nickels and dimes that have accumulated in this metal bank my friends at the Commerce furnished to help along my thrift campaign."

Replied Patriot-who-raves: "Autocracy has committed the greatest crime of history! My blood boils! I wish I could get my hands on that Kaiser just once! Believe me, I would----"

But Patriot-who-saves was on his way. It was already five minutes after the bank's closing time, but he knew his deposit would be accepted, because courteous, beyond-the-rules service is always assured at the Commerce.

War-Camp Community Service

Is an integral part of the system established by the government of the United States for the training and preparation of the soldiers and sailors in its camps and naval stations.

In St. Louis its committees conduct a Soldiers', Sailors' and Marines' Club; Recreational Supplies Depot; arranges week-end and church hospitality for men in uniform; provides military hospital visitation; conducts a War Activities Information Bureau; promotes athletics, dances and other activities which will give our fighting men the recreation they so much need and deserve during their brief stay here; and in co-operation with the Globe-Democrat publishes a United States newspaper.

The War Camp Community Service is a part of the Fosdick Commission. Its work, which is approved by the War Department, deserves the support of every St. Louisian. If there is anything you would like to do for the men in uniform call the War Camp Community Service, Olive 3189.

W A N T E D

The Buy-Word for a Good Drink

THE Ancient Egyptians, according to history, were the first to brew a cereal beverage. The rich grain fields of the lower Nile furnished vast products for experiment, so it is not strange that these wise people should have discovered that cereals were the basis of nutritious beverages.

Their first brew was called "HEK". We have revived the name for our beverage, because like the Egyptian monuments of old, it is the symbol of everlasting vitality. Just as the Sphinx and the Pyramids represent the utmost skill in construction, so does HEK signify perfection in the art of beverage production.

HEK is refreshment in its most palatable form—a foamy, cooling, wholesome drink, rich in the carbohydrates and protein of Nature's strength building cereals.

HEK is a sparkling, invigorating, non-intoxicating drink, good for every member of the family, young and old. It will add zest to a luncheon, a dinner or an after theatre supper.

HEK should be served cold.

HEK is now on sale wherever wholesome drinks are served.
