Laws on Leg-Hold Animal Traps Around the World

Compiled by the Staff of the Global Legal Research Directorate

The chart below contains information on laws regulating or banning the use of leg-hold traps in 108 jurisdictions. Where it was available, information on when each ban was established is included. In a number of jurisdictions the law generally regulates or bans all traps, or prohibits trapping in particular areas, without separately addressing the question of leg-hold traps; those jurisdictions have been included in the chart. Countries with laws that merely provide in general terms that animals must be treated humanely have not been included. Some countries, such as India and Sri Lanka, have at times considered restrictions on traps but to date have not adopted them; such countries are not listed here. The European Union (EU) entry identifies the 1991 European Economic Community (EEC) Council Regulation banning the use of leg-hold traps that is binding on all EU Member States; the entries on individual EU countries additionally provide citations to any national or local laws on the subject.
