THE COURSE OF EMPIRE

After some eleven months of Pax Romana, the civilizing of Ethiopia has advanced to the point where Italian Viceroy Graziani, passing out gifts, is forced to dodge a barrage of hand grenades. And the Italian militia, to be sure that none guilty escapes, rounds up a large number of natives in Addis Ababa and "liquidates" them before firing squads.

Thus does the new Roman Empire run true to the course pursued by the old Roman Empire, the British Empire, the French Empire, and all other imperial adventures, including our own. When one people assumes that its destiny is to carry its own particular brand of civilization to other peoples, it may as well take for granted that the others will react with their own particular brands of gratitude.—(N. Y. World Telegram.)

WAR'S GENTLE SIDE

A device that blossomed in the World war is said to be proving quite successful in the Spanish conflict.

It is the dropping of propaganda over enemy lines. Such literature contains invitations to desert, and describes temptingly the splendid treatment that prisoners receive.

Because of its success, the idea may be used to greater extent in future wars. And, though propaganda generally serves no good purpose, it is possible that this practice might be an exception.

For one thing, war prisoners are apt to get better treatment, since their captors naturally will want word of it to spread to the enemy and spur defection from the ranks.

And at the very worst it is a little more human to beat your enemy by luring his men away with soft words than by blowing his insides out with high explosives.

acquired a taste for adventure which I have never since lost.

"Montana had some real bad men in those days, especially the Curry gang of desperadoes. Cattle rustling, train robbing with an occasional murder was their main business.

"A five years' feud developed between the Paddle G Ranch and the gang, and there were three killings before the gang was broken up.

"Pop Curry, the head of the gang, thought it would be a good idea to confiscate our property, and the feud started when he turned up at the ranch early one morning with his men and shot my boss, Jim Winters, as he was washing his hands and face in the yard.

$15,000 Robbery

"Curry's horse bucked, and the shot only grazed Jim, who dashed into the house and opened fire from a window. Pop Curry caught a bullet in the neck and was killed. They rode off swearing vengeance, taking their dead chief with them.

"The gang shortly afterwards held up a train and robbed it of bullion worth 15,000 pounds. They remained in hiding in their mountain lair for a while, and began their war on the Paddle G Ranch.

"They surrounded the place & their guns set up a little symphony of hate. Jim Winters was killed before he could slip into the house.

"I dodged the bullets by zig-zagging among the boulders, and managed to reach Landusky, the (Continued on Page Four)

Down Town Blaze Calls Large Fire Force

Almost encircling the building with streams of water, most of Detroit's fire fighting crews quelled a fire in a five-story building and prevented its spreading to a section housing a hotel. Loss was estimated by officials occupying the building at $100,000.
