DISNEY STARS MARIONETTE IN FULL-LENGTH HIT

"Pinocchio" Ends Tonight on Screen at Capitol Theatre

A toymaker who wants a son to love, a cricket who wants a gold badge, and a puppet who wants to be a real live hero are the principal figures in "Pinocchio," the full-length Walt Disney fantasy presented in multiplane technicolor for the last times tonight at the Capitol Theatre.

Pinocchio is the puppet who, in response to the toymaker's wish to have a son, is turned into a live boy. But he does not become a real boy until he learns, by the trial and error method, to distinguish between right and wrong.

The Walt Disney version of "Pinocchio" is based on the story by G. Collodi. It is well-loved by children and adults and has been translated into more than two hundred languages and dialects.

Hollywood Sights And Sounds

By Robin Coons

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Dec. 27.—It's the "little people" on the back lot who really know what's going on in pictures.

They're "little" only in the sense that the public seldom, if ever, hears about them. But collectively they have burned and shaken Pompeii, planted Compiègne forest, built an Oakie village.

Joe Trusty is one of the back lot's lights-under-a-bushel. His is a bushel of flowers. Joe and his assistants, working in the prop-shop basement, make the flowers used in their pictures.

I haven't seen Harry Redmond for months, but there's a fellow who always has something interesting to show. It was Harry, an "effects" expert, who did the storms in "Only Angels Have Wings" and who, as I recall it, burned and quaked Pompeii for that city's "last days" in the movies.

always playing with fire or powder or wires — playing seriously, because that's his business.

James Gibbons, head of the prop-show, had a problem long before Edward G. Robinson started studying his lines for "A Dispatch from Reuter's." He had to find something to serve as a canister buoy of the type Reuter used to "scoop" all England on the assassination of Abraham Lincoln.

A man who "builds" oceans and far horizons (among many things) is William O'Connell, scenic department head. He provided the realistic, shimmering sea backgrounds for "The Sea Hawk" and now is duplicating the job for "The Sea Wolf."

Winds and rains and fogs — the little people are always experimenting with new kinds. Winds come from giant propellers for the storms or from giant canvas tubes for zephyrs. Rain comes from overhead pipes and sometimes from fire hoses for a really stormy long-shot rain.

COMMUNICATION

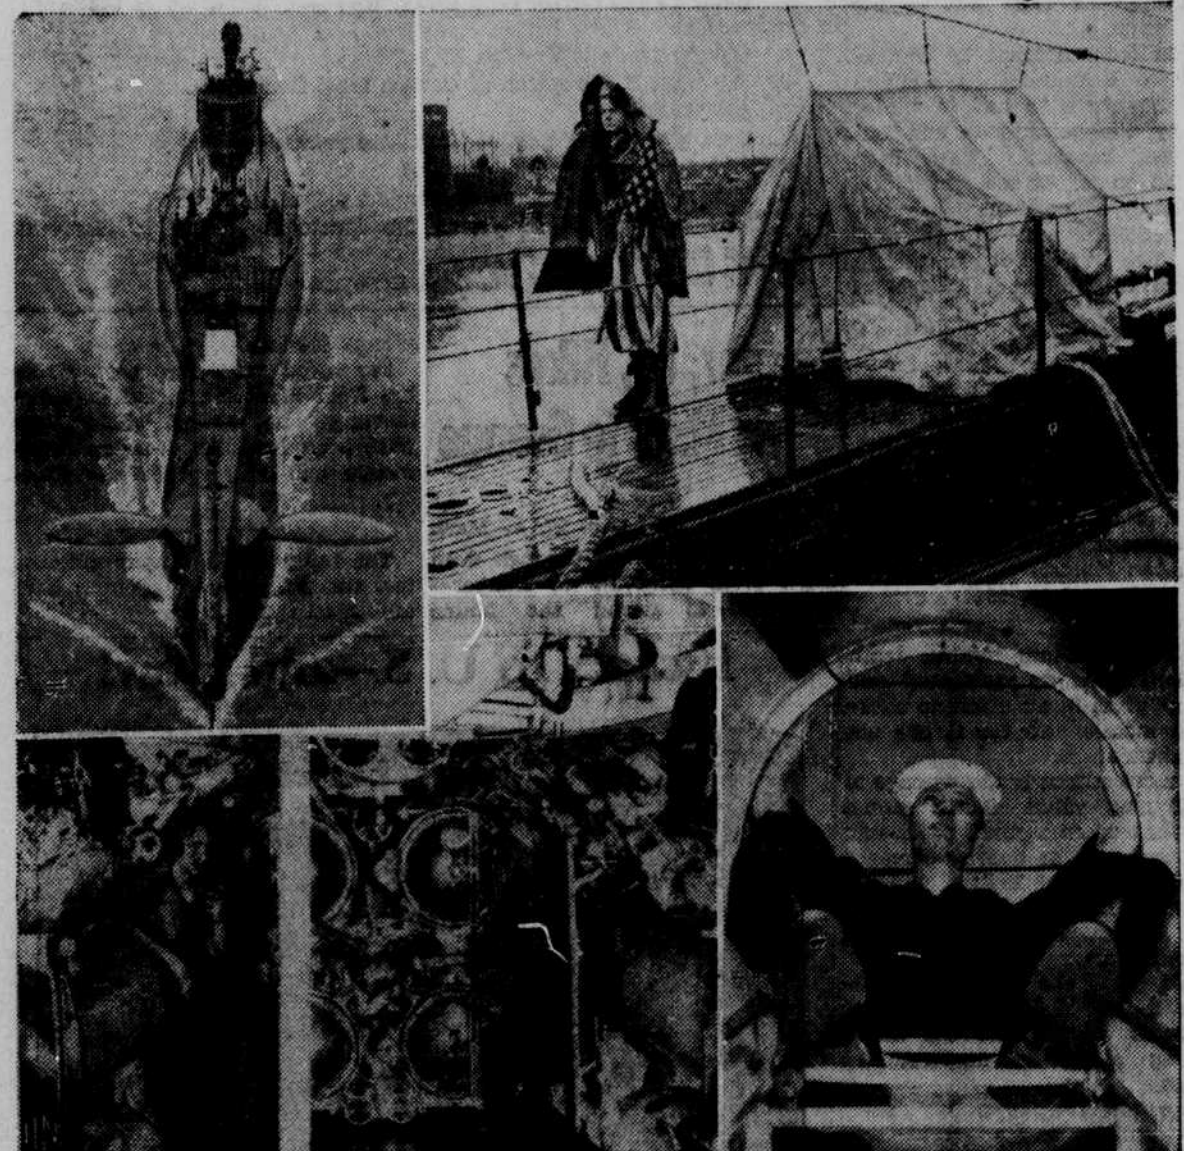

EDITOR, DAILY ALASKA EMPIRE — Enrollees of the Montana CCC Camp wish to take this means of conveying their most gracious thanks to the employees of the Forest Service Regional Office, the District Ranger's Office, and all others who so generously contributed to a fund that made possible the distribution of Christmas stockings to all enrollees in the Montana Creek Camp.

The stockings, neatly designed in green netting, contained generous supplies of peanuts, hard Christmas candy, an orange, a package of cigarettes, and a pocket jack knife.

The gang wishes to especially thank Mrs. Harry Lucas, whose kind generosity made possible the purchasing, designing and final sewing of the stockings.

Navy Speeds Up Training of New Crews For 84 Submarines Under Construction

Training for overseas service, sailors stand at attention as the training submarine R-13 puts out of New London harbor (top left). The color guard aboard the R-13 prepares to hoist the flag as the shore siren sounds at 8 a.m. The tent is to keep rain out of the deck hatchway (top right). At lower left is an interior view of the training sub, showing the forward torpedo room. There are four one-ton torpedoes in the racks in addition to those in the tubes. Part of the crew sleep in hammocks in this gadget-filled room. Lower right, Seaman William Graham comes down a companionway ladder facing the wrong way, proving he's a greenhorn in the service—but not for long.

As part of the program to give the United States the greatest fleet in world history, an all-powerful two-ocean navy, eighty-four submarines are now under construction or contracted for.

during their meals. Despite these drawbacks, there is no shortage of candidates for the overseas fleet, for the enlisted men are paid $25 a month more than Uncle Sam's regular gobs, and food on the submarines is rated as the Navy's best.

An estimated 120 for Germany, 69 for Japan and 50 for Britain. But U. S. subs are fleet warships, designed to accompany the main battle force on extended cruises. The new ones average 2,000 tons underwater displacement, 300 feet in length, 26-foot beam, and 17 to 20-knot surface speed. Under water they do 8 or 9 knots.

U. S. naval strategy calls for use of the submarines in groups to ambush enemy war fleets or convoys and singly as scouting units. They are therefore capable of unusually long voyages and carry exceptionally heavy armament, including a three-inch cannon, anti-aircraft gun and 2,000-pound torpedoes.

In Case of Bombs...

Here is an air raid precaution device which wards off flying shrapnel. Stylish in England, it is made of metal with rubber padding between the mask and face. During a bombardment the circular pieces are lowered and the wearer sees through the slits.

So Goering Took It

Lady Decies When Lady Decies, formerly Elizabeth Drexel of Philadelphia, arrived in New York from Europe, she told of meeting Field Marshal Hermann Goering of Germany in a Paris dress shop and how "as I was about to decide on a beautiful beige coat with fur collar Goering reached over and said he would take it for his own wife." Lady Decies said that "there was nothing I could do."
