IN the course of a recent address to the Democrats in Brooklyn, N. Y., Senator Bayard made those telling points:

A FAIR ISSUE. The condition of our country presents for our consideration no political problems which demand a wise and reasonable solution at our hands.

IT is clear to me that if the line of argument to be followed, and issues are to be created and fostered between the capital and labor of the country, or between different classes and employments of our citizens, that in such a contest there must ultimately be declared after long and disastrous contest, in favor of the one or the other.
