THE PHOENIX HERALD.

SEMI-WEEKLY EDITION. Saturday, June 28, 1879. Forty Years Hence.

The San Francisco Bulletin after speaking of the past thus talks of the future.

Forty years hence, and what? The Derian canal will be one of the great highways of commerce. Steam will be applied still more economically to ocean transportation. It has gained almost a hundred per cent, in cheapness and effectiveness in the last ten years. There will be half a dozen lines of railroad across the continent. Half a dozen or more great cities will be located along the coast—one at least in Alaska, one or two on Puget Sound, another on the Columbia, one possibly midway between the mouth of that river and San Francisco, another down the coast, possibly at San Diego, and another on the Gulf of California, perhaps at Guaymas. There will be a great midway city between the Missouri and the Pacific coast, perhaps at Salt Lake, or at some other point still more favorable for trade. The City of Mexico will be Americanized and made a great railway centre, and the mining interests south of the Colorado will be vastly more important than any that have been developed north of the line. The centre of population will have gone far west of the Missouri river, being at the expiration of that time not far from the base of the Rocky Mountains. The fisheries and the great lumber region of the Northwest will be in and about Alaska, a country just now little esteemed, in fact, deemed of too little consequence for an organized territorial Government. The redwood forests will have entirely disappeared, and both sides of the Sierra will have been denuded for mines, quartz mills and railroads. Here and there will be small forests which have been planted and cultivated by private enterprise. The coal and the timber will come down from the north; copper and iron ore will come from the same region. New Orleans will be nearer to San Francisco in point of time, than Salt Lake is today. Currents of trade will have changed. The merchant on this side of the country will not go to the other side to buy goods. All military roads once led to Rome. All commercial roads on this continent will finally lead to San Francisco—at least that is the logic of events as we now forecast them for the next half century.

TO THE NORTH POLE.

No greater interest probably has ever been taken in any expedition from the United States toward the Pole than that now felt in the proposed voyage of the Jeannette, the steam yacht of James Gordon Bennett, now lying at Mare Island, Cal., preparatory to setting forth on her voyage to the North. There are some features connected with the enterprise that make it peculiar. The expedition is a private enterprise, but by special acts of Congress, the vessel is manned by officers of the United States Navy and allowed, all the rights and privileges of a Government ship. By a similar Act of Congress, the vessel which is a British hull, having been bought in England by Mr. Bennett, was allowed to sail under American colors and assume a new name, being originally named the Pandora. Her course, too, will be different from that hitherto taken by any vessel designed for a voyage of scientific exploration. All other expeditions in search of the open Polar Sea have been by way of Baffin Bay. The Jeannette will be the first vessel to pass Behring Strait, on a purely explorative voyage toward the North Pole. There have been several previous voyages to the Arctic by this route, but the object in these instances was the discovery of Sir John Franklin and not the exploration of an unknown portion of the globe.
