Character of Geronimo in a Different Light from Popular Tales

WAS NOT A BRAVE MAN, BUT CUNNING; WIFE OFTEN BEAT HIM

(By Charles T. Connell in Bisbee Review.)

Geronimo, whose true Apache name is Poo-ah-ly, is a member of the Janos tribe of Apaches that dwell in the range of mountains that divide the states of Sonora and Chihuahua, Mexico. He was born on the Janos river on the eastern slope of the Sierra Madre mountains in the northern part of Chihuahua about the year 1828. This tribe affiliated with the Warm Springs or Ojo Calientes, whose home was on the Mimbres river in southern New Mexico. These two branches of the Apache tribe were on friendly terms and intermarried with the Chiricahua who lived in and around the Dragon mountains in the southern part of Arizona. They were allies in war and during periods of peace with the whites exchanged visits, being considered by the government wards of a single nation. Geronimo was considered nothing but an Indian "rounder" by the attaches of the different army posts throughout the southwest in early days and it has been stated upon good authority that his personal valor was sorely tested by his first wife, a Mescalero squaw, who beat him severely many times.

Geronimo, by those with whom he came in contact in the early history of the Indian reservations to which he remained, was never known as the brave man he is represented. Men are living today in Arizona who knew him when he roamed back and forth from Mimbres river to the Sulphur Springs valley. At the time, more particularly when he loafed around the agency at Sulphur Springs which was located about ten miles south of Cochise station on the Southern Pacific railway in Arizona, in the years 1874-75, he was simply a hanger-on, a recipient of weekly rations, with no standing other than that of an ordinary, shiftless buck, roaming here and there, looting and raiding under the leadership of other men.

Geronimo's reputation as a warrior was made by the newspapers of Arizona and the correspondents during the Apache outbreaks from 1881 to 1886 on account of his being selected by General Crook as the most pliable emissary to treat with in conciliating the hostiles.

Every raid that was made by the different well known war chiefs, Chatta Nana, Bonito, Loco and others, who raided the country in different sections of Arizona and New Mexico, also far down in Old Mexico, was credited to Geronimo. Whenever any depredation was committed, or murderous raids consummated, it was heralded as the work of Geronimo. No matter what section of Arizona, New Mexico or Old Mexico was subjected to Apache deviltry, it was sent broadcast that it was the dread Geronimo again. To those who knew it was Bonito and Chatta, Chi, huahua and Natchez, Loco, Nana or Chil-i-kana. Those were the masterly hands that led the murderous raids throughout the stricken country.

But, it is asked, How came Geronimo to have any power and why is he looked upon as an Apache chief? It is necessary to go into the history of the Apache nation to answer. One must realize that there were eight different Apache tribes. The ones we have to deal with in figuring out the power of Geronimo are the Chiricahua, Warm Springs and Janos Apaches, his native tribe. In the first place, the Chiricahua were placed on the San Carlos reservation in May 1876, at which time Geronimo was an outlaw with Pi-on-se-nay. The Warm Springs banded with the Rio Mimbres of New Mexico with a sprinkling of Janos Apaches in 1878. The dominating branch of these allied tribes were the Chiricahua of Arizona, more particularly after the death of Victoria, the chief of the Warm Springs, in 1879, who was succeeded by Nana and later by Loco. The Chiricahua Apaches were headed by Cochise until his death June 8, 1874. He left two sons, Natchez, who is still living at Fort Sill, Oklahoma and Taza, who died in Washington while on a visit there in 1879.

Natchez is the hereditary chief of the Chiricahua Apaches and has been since the death of his brother, but a powerful man among his tribe named Juh, was the recognized war chief. Geronimo has often been heralded as the chief of the Chiricahua but it is a well known fact and corroborated by Jeffords and Hughes, the agents of the tribe in 1874-75, who are living today, that the self-styled chief is but a scheming interloper. As to the Warm Springs, Victoria, the successor of Mangus Colorado was the head of the Mimbres branch and was succeeded by Nana and later by Loco. Chatta, a Chiricahua was a renegade from an outlawed band of Apaches gathered together from the Iopotos White Mountains in Arizona and the Burros in New Mexico. But upon the Warm Springs being taken to San Carlos he accompanied them, with a few followers. Bonito was a full-blooded Chiricahua, as was Chihuahua. When the Apaches, consisting of the members of these branches broke away from the reservation in October, 1881, Juh, a full-blooded Apache, was the war chief that led the allied forces among whom was Geronimo. At this time Geronimo was but an ordinary buck, and the writer knew him personally, and can testify that this was true. At this outbreak in 1881, Natchez did not go with his tribe nor did Loco of the Warm Springs and it was not until April 19, 1882, that they did go, at this time being forced to do so by reason of Juh, who remained in Mexico, sending a force of about 100 bucks to San Carlos under Chihuahua, Geronimo and Bonita for that purpose, because Loco then had in his band many of the squaws and young women who were left behind in the flight in the September previous.

This is the first time we hear of the celebrated Geronimo. However the first outbreak in October, 1881, was under the leadership of Juh, the acknowledged war chief, and the second in 1882, under Chiricahua and Bonito. After the raid was made and the women taken to Mexico, we find that a few months later, Juh, while crossing the Janos river in northern Chihuahua, fell from his horse and was drowned. This incident put the gathering clans of the allied tribes under different leaders. Bonito and Chihuahua had separate bands of Chiricahua, nominally under the control of Natchez, the supreme head. Chatta had his sulking band of renegades that raided New Mexico. Geronimo was in charge of a mixed family of Janos Apaches under the direct leadership of one Chil-i-kana. After the death of Juh, Geronimo began to make himself known as a leader. It was always acknowledged by the Indians of the three branches that Geronimo was a great schemer and before raids were made into the different parts of the country, he was generally consulted, because for many years he had been a wanderer from the Rio Grande to the limits of the Apache country on the west and far down into Mexico in the Sierra Madre mountains. He knew every trail, every mountain, every ranch, every settlement, every water hole, the mountain passes and desert plain over the vast area claimed by the fierce Apaches. It was for this reason that Geronimo was sought by the different chiefs when the bloody raids were contemplated. Again, Geronimo was an exhorter and his power of persuasion was great, but his faculty did not develop to an extent to lead him into power until the great outbreak from San Carlos in October, 1881. Through consummate cunning and the assistance of his right-hand man, his son-in-law, Chil-i-nina, (Waving Field, so called on account of his wavy hair) his plans were carried out.

Chil-i-nina was a captive Mexican and married one of Geronimo's daughters. He was one of the most ferocious, cunning and daring men who peered an Apache raid. It was he, who at the head of Geronimo's few followers, carried out the schemes of the wily Geronimo. To him should be given the dreaded name that followed the deeds attributed to the skill of Geronimo as a fighter, but for all that, it should not be forgotten that this scheming agitator led the plans that brought death and sorrow to many homes, ruin and desolation to hardy pioneers, hardships and disappointment to sturdy prospectors, stagnation to business in a prosperous country and dotted the plains and mountain passes with crosses that mark the resting places of the murdered travelers, ambushed and mutilated.

ESKIMO MAY FIND POLE

"The explorers who are trying to find the North Pole now don't know how to do it," says Mene, an Eskimo living in New York. "They fit out comfortable ships with a crew of 50, carrying electric lights and things to make life pass pleasantly up there, where they know it will be lonesome. They stay in a comfortable harbor until spring, and then make a dash to see how far they can go. When the summer is over they start back home, and when they return they write books and magazine articles."

"The North Pole will never be discovered in such a way. The man who finds it will go as far as he can in one season and make a permanent camp there until the next season. Then he will continue on his journey, and in such a way he must succeed. That's what I want to do. Not only do I want to be the first to find the North Pole, so that the honor will go to one of my race, but I want to explore the vast unknown tracts of Greenland, which contains more country unknown to man than any other land. With what I know of my race, their language, folk-songs and customs, I want to study their origin. I remember the stories of the mythology of my people told me when I was seven years old, and I am sure that if I have the opportunity I can write a history of the Eskimos and of Greenland that may show the relation between my own people and the other races better than it has ever been done."—New York Sun.

The Nine Lives of a Store

"THE ONLY ONE OF A CAT'S NINE LIVES WHICH IT CANNOT AFFORD TO LOSE IS THE NINTH."

1. STORE LOCATION: Important, but not vital. Most any poor location may be turned into a good one.
2. FIXTURES: Should be "right," but particular kinds are not indispensable.
3. STOCK: Must be up-to-date; must have intrinsic worth, aptness to human needs.
4. SALESMANSHIP: Clerks should glow with good nature and know people as well as goods.
5. DELIVERY SYSTEM: Should make the store "nearly" to every home in the city.
6. DIRECTION: One head and many "helping heads," all in perfect accord.
7. RIGHT BUYING: Stock purchases when prices are "ben-ish," and always with local demands in mind.
8. RIGID SELLING: Fair profits on most things—losses on some when occasion demands.
9. PUBLICITY: The "Keystone of the Arch." If not ample, if not intelligent, if not continuous—the store fails.

A Store must be as careful of its ninth life as the cat.

The other eight lives should not be imperilled nor impaired; but the ninth life should carry the heaviest insurance

Does not the above mean something to you, Mr. Merchant? Does it not suggest an "intelligent" advertising campaign in the Silver Belt? I'd be glad to talk it over with you. Just phone 231.

Ladies, we urge you to take advantage of the wonderful bargains we're offering you. Goods are actually being slaughtered. You never will see such bargains again.

Today's Suggestion by Ellen Stan.

TAILORED WAISTS ARE IMPORTANT.

ALTHOUGH it might be said that the tucked or plaited style in waists is not as extremely fashionable as it was some years ago for the reason that it is not now used in dressy costumes, still it is a type that the American woman cannot afford to put aside, particularly women engaged in business, outdoor sports or house duties.

The design illustrated is suitable for stout figures and may be made of tub materials, such as madras, linen, tucked or striped nainsook and similar fabrics, or of taffeta, serge, jousine and other silks, or of lightweight woolen materials, such as albatross and nun's veiling.

When waists are intended for wear with tailored suits they usually match in color or tone with the suit material. The collar is made high and pointed just back of the ears and often ornamented with hand embroidery and the top edge finished with a narrow ruche of white.

For a different development of this waist the long, tight leg o' mutton sleeve may be employed. The material should be tucked before cutting out, and the collar could be made of the material arranged in narrow folds.

For a garment constructed in this way the directive sash would make a pretty finish. This may be bought ready made, or it may be arranged at home. It is brought around the waist and secured where it laps by a long, narrow pin that comes for the purpose, then draped low on the left side and knotted.

Still another pretty idea for a silk waist is that of combining two colors. This is done by the use of narrow plaitings. Take, for instance, a brown silk and trim the collar, cuffs and edge of the front box plait with a plaiting of green satin one inch wide.

This pattern provides regular shirt sleeves as well as those in leg o' mutton style. The pattern is cut in seven sizes—from 32 to 44 inches bust measure. To copy it for the average person requires 3 1/2 yards of material 27 inches wide or 2 3/4 yards 36 inches wide.

Any reader of this paper who desires to secure this pattern may do so by sending 10 cents to this office. Give the number, 4344, state size desired and write the full address plainly. The pattern will be forwarded promptly by mail.
