

WILSON SPEAKS ON LAW AND CORRUPTION

turns themselves. The whole process of discussion, if any discussion at all takes place, is private and shut away from public scrutiny and knowledge.

It is this confusion and obscurity and privacy of our legislative method that give the political machine its opportunity. Apparently nothing but the political machine can bring order out of chaos.

One of the best instances that could be cited as the whole disorganizing business of our legislation with regard to import duties.

Source of Corruption. Everybody will agree that if the tariff policy is indeed to be protective and to seek the objects which it has always pretended to be, it is perfectly legitimate that it should have to pay a very careful regard to the business interests of the country taken as a whole.

Machine Always Controlled. It is not altogether just to indulge in indiscriminate blame for this state of affairs; our legislatures being at loose ends, nobody in particular being responsible, it was natural not to say inevitable that some sort of control should spring up.

Hampering Good Service. The methods used are well enough known. Money has not only been supplied to those men in public life who would be serviceable to big business interests by way of promoting the legislation they desired and preventing the legislation they feared.

Business Men Our Hope. The country has definitely made up its mind that it will get at the root of the matter and of all other matters like it, and that it will break up this alliance.

Money a Necessity. Unhappily money is necessary at every turn of the political game. It is necessary in connection with every part of our electoral process because our electoral processes have to be public, men have to be con-to the old ways and who will stand out for them to the last, but they will sink into a minority and be overcome. They have found that their old excuse that it was necessary to defend themselves against unfair legislation is no longer a good excuse.

Responsible Leadership. This discussion on their part of what ought to have been obvious all along points out the way of reform.

The Tariff Evil. One of the best instances that could be cited as the whole disorganizing business of our legislation with regard to import duties.
