Mystery Surrounds Return of a Check MESA, March 19.—Issued to a Jeweler in Los Angeles on the 16th of last month, a check for $100, signed by W. E. Walters, cashier of the First National Bank of Mesa, was picked up on the street near the postoffice yesterday forenoon by R. E. Steele. Complete mystery shrouds the finding of the check, and how it found its way to Mesa, to be lost on the street here, is a puzzle at present unsolved.

Steele turned the check in at the bank, and there, following on the heels of forgeries that have been reported the past few days, the tellers were of the opinion that it was another forgery. For a time the cashier himself could not recall issuing it. Later he remembered drawing the check for $100 while in Los Angeles on the 19th of last February, it being given in exchange for merchandise that was received.

Cashier Walters left for Los Angeles last evening in connection with business for the bank, and plans to look into the case more fully while there.

The war gardens did not receive the credit to which they were entitled. Few people appreciated just how much they helped the nation. Funny stories were told concerning them; facetious remarks were made in connection with those who undertook to grow a little food in the backyard.

There is no reason to believe that garden vegetables will be cheaper this year than they were last year. There is every indication, in fact, that they will be fully as high or higher. It is going to cost just as much to produce not a social cult or an affection. It is a frame of mind. Among the intellectuals the enthusiasm for England is, I should say, overwhelmingly predominant. URGENT ACTION BY STATE ON GRAND CANYON PROJECT

C. of C. Report Says Arizona Should Obtain Share of Proposed Colorado River Irrigation

People of Arizona should put forth their best efforts at Washington in order to secure irrigation for hundreds of thousands of land along the Colorado river, it was announced at the Phoenix chamber of commerce yesterday.

The proposed Grand Canyon dam, as fostered by former Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, will provide sufficient water to irrigate more than 1,500,000 acres of land.

Mr. Lane is in Los Angeles and has been invited by the chamber of commerce to visit Phoenix and Arizona. This invitation was general, carrying with it no other motive than to have the former secretary visit the community, but it is believed by those vitally interested in new reclamation projects that Mr. Lane can give good advice upon the Grand Canyon project as proposed by him while in office.

"What are you going to do to make congress realize," he is quoted as saying in a recent speech in Los Angeles, "that there is at least 1,500,000 acres of land which the world needs brought into service because of the peculiar character of the soil and of the climate and that must be used in large part until somebody has the money to combine with existing water rights and store the waters of the Grand and the Colorado, the tributaries of the Colorado, and let these waters out over the land below in Arizona and California in such a way as to bring about the greatest results?"

"Until somebody has the money," is a phrase emphasized by Mr. Lane, in stating private capital, unless the states work for reclamation through congress. He also refers to Lower California as a beneficiary through the damming of the Colorado.

Continuing, the former secretary said:

"There is no one other possibility in the United States that will involve so much money; $100,000,000 ought to be spent in the development of the Colorado river within the next ten years."

"I have had engineers at work upon a plan, which is partly my own, conceived in ignorance, but in hope, for making of the Grand Canyon itself the most splendid reservoir that this world knows. I have put to the engineers this question: 'Why is it not practical to break down the walls of the canyon 100 miles west of El Tovar itself and with the rock make a dam that would hold back water enough to supply 1,500,000 acres of land?' It would mean the largest, highest dam in the world, but we are used to doing things that way."

Only recently George H. Maxwell, known as the father of the Salt river project, said that 2,000,000 acres could be irrigated in Arizona alone through such a dam and the electrical power generated harnessed. Mr. Lane's figures, he admits, are low for straight irrigation. He does not take into account the power possibilities, which would make it possible to lift water at a minimum cost to a maximum height to irrigate elevated areas of rich land lying back from the southern bank of the Colorado and as far south as the Gila river, even to the door of Phoenix, according to chamber of commerce information. The dam would also provide water by diversion at all low points along the Arizona side in Mohave and Yuma counties. These possibilities coincide with the views of the former secretary and his engineers.

"I challenge you," the former secretary continues, "to bring such pressure to bear upon congress and upon the people of the United States that they will see an opportunity to do a great thing for this section of our land—by making the Colorado river what it may be, the most useful single river in the United States in the amount of crops that it can make to produce."

This talk in Los Angeles met with the most enthusiastic applause, according to the report of the meeting. The plan provides liberally for the irrigation of the lowlands of Southern California. Only a certain number of water rights could be secured under the proposed project and it is necessary for Arizona to get busy with regard to these rights before it is too late. This is the admonition of the Phoenix chamber of commerce.

"Now, my friends," Mr. Lane concluded, "you are going to see this done—the great work upon the Colorado river, but it won't be done unless you are persistent. We are only beginning to see the possibilities of Arizona."

YOU CAN BEAT THE "PROFITEER"

by cutting out the expensive foods (so lacking in real nutriment) and eating the simple, natural, inexpensive foods that contain the largest amount of digestible nutriment. Shredded Wheat contains more real nutriment than meat or eggs, is more easily digested than potatoes or other starchy foods. Two of these little loaves of baked whole wheat with hot milk (or hot water and butter) make a nourishing, satisfying meal at a cost of a few cents.
