THE BOOK OF ANN
The Beauty of Miss Columbia Excites
My Jealousy

By the time we were all attired for the ballet of the ballots, Jim had welcomed the crowd, and the mayor and the governor and Martha Palmer had made their little speeches. All with vast success, we judged, as the applause floated back to the bungalows where we were dressing.

I was too tired to care much about the show. I simply wanted to get through with it, to count it as a thing of the past. The careless way in which Ann had disposed of the girls' rings made me nervous, and I suppose Katherine Miller's loveliness exasperated and depressed me.

She was not one of a chorus, as I was. She was Miss Columbia, unique and superb. She was not a haughty Columbia arrayed in dignified drapery of silk as stiff as armor, but the Columbia of a dream world, draped in layers of diaphanous nets, a vision of the red, white and blue personified.

Cheers greeted her as she emerged from the darkness of the trees and advanced magically to a huge natural boulder in the meadow, which anybody could plainly see Natue had planted there especially for our "pretend" Plymouth Rock. A hidden arrangement of powerful fans behind her draped and blew her magnificent hair about her very magnificent face.

"Such hair! Such hair!" ran my jealous thought, and I tried to find my husband's face in the crowd, I wanted to see how the vision affected him, and because I could not find him, I assumed that he must be deeply moved by it.

Only my own need to listen, for my eye forced me to give up my search for Bob.

Columbia, in the ballet, was plagued by a horde of evil gnomes. Our nice boy scouts obligingly masqueraded as these wicked creatures, that is, they were willing to take parts after they learned that their faces would be covered and that we wouldn't put their names on the program. No one of them was willing to be set down as "greed," or profiteer, or selfishness, or fraud, or anti-Americanism, or any other of the heinous enemies that danced around Columbia and tantalized her like wicked gnats.

Columbia, with many a vain command, bade them advance and depart, and at her dominating gesture, the wicked gnomes would shrink up and sink away, but eventually they always returned to harass her, and every time they came back, their numbers had increased in a manner which caused her great dismay.

Blasphemy in despair, Columbia was obliged to summon her natural defenders, the ballots.

Blasphemy in despair, Columbia was obliged to summon her natural defenders, the ballots. Blast after blast she blew upon her silver bugle, and, at each call, one of the lovely girls of the ballet emerged suddenly from behind a group of trees or a hedge. And certainly each "blast" was a dainty picture as she tripped in frantic haste but with terpsichorean grace to the rescue of the distressed goddess.

The applause for each of us was tremendous. The audience was pleased not only because the girls were beautiful. The people caught the idea of the rally—that by means of the ballot, Columbia could be saved from every danger.

I was one of the first to be summoned by Columbia that night. Taking my place near Katherine Miller, in an attitude of defense, I found that I was in a position to look straight at Jim Junior, who, as chairman, had a prominent position near our mock Plymouth Rock. Never had I seen Jimmy-boy looking so perfectly handsome.

After me came Deborah Burns, Katherine Miller's only competitor in beauty that night. For me, Deb is the personification of what an American girl ought to be. Jim hadn't seen her for over three years. Deborah was simply superb as she hastened to her place next to me. And Jimmy-boy's face was a study.

The next bugle call summoned Willy Van Eyck, but I failed to observe her progress. I couldn't help watching Jim and Deb. They had forgotten where they were. They had forgotten themselves. They were simply gazing at each other, like ghosts or spirits, across infinite time and space, it seemed to me.

Jim failed to see his wife dance across the green when her turn came. I felt that I would have to speak to Deb, that I ought to interrupt that never-to-be-forgotten glance, before Ann lined up with us, and looked about her. So I whispered some common place to Deb.

Ann mustn't see—for her own sake—and for Jim's.

Deb and Jim were heroic souls. I knew they would never give poor little Ann a single moment's heartache.

MESA GARAGES TO GO ON CASH BASIS

MESA, Aug. 27.—An increase in price of two cents per gallon on gasoline, and a smaller margin of profit on that and other supplies has caused the proprietors of Mesa service stations and garages to announce that they will go on a strictly cash basis on September 1, 1920. Such a decision was reached at a meeting of the garage and station owners held Thursday night at which time the Mesa Dealers' Automobile Supply association was formed.

The increase in gasoline to 38 cents per gallon became effective on Thursday and with the nation-wide raise in freight rates. Retail dealers contend that even with the two cents increase, their margin of profit is smaller.

Clemans, it is alleged, while driving on the Chandler road Wednesday night struck two different vehicles, the last one being badly damaged and two of its occupants injured, necessitating their removal to a Phoenix hospital. The defendant's preliminary hearing has been set for Saturday morning.

Home From East
Mrs. Charles E. Carey returned to Mesa Friday following a visit of a month with relatives at her former home in Ohio.

ASK STOCKYARDS BE MOVED OUTSIDE CITY

TEMPE, Aug. 27.—Foreseeing the growth of Tempe to include the new subdivision west of the city, where a section of land was recently disposed of in small tracts, the council has taken an initial step in the improvement of that part of the town by requiring the removal of the stockyards of the Arizona Eastern railroad company to a point outside the city limits. At a special meeting this week the matter came up before the city council, and the clerk was directed to take it up with the corporation commission.

The stockyards in their present condition and location are unsightly and unhealthy in the opinion of the councilmen, and since repairs will soon be necessary on them, now is the logical time to make the move. A site for the yards a mile south of town is offered, it is said.

Will Live in Colorado
Mr. and Mrs. George Turnbow and children, who have made their home in Tempe for several years, left Friday evening for their former home near Trinidad, Colo., where they will reside. The Turnbow residence at 205 East Sixth street has been purchased by Paul Apple.

CHANDLER NEWS

Justice Court Happenings
CHANDLER, Aug. 27.—The local justice court was a busy place on Wednesday. The case of the state versus Lawrence Entrenkin was settled by the agreement of Mr. Entrenkin to pay $25 each month for the support of his wife and child.

The case of the state versus A. Pierce on the charge of assault was also heard. M. P. Freeman has installed a powerful searchlight on the Lemon Bros. Hardware company building, directly across the street from his service station, and it will be a great aid to the motorist who is passing through Chandler to know that he will be able to secure water or air at any time of the night.

The new yard of the Halstead Lumber company is rapidly nearing completion and when completed will certainly be a credit to the city.

Floyd Bouton of the Bank of Chandler is expected home on Sunday after spending several weeks visiting the Grand Canyon, Los Angeles, Ocean Park and San Diego.
