

THE YOUNG LADY ACROSS THE WAY

THE YOUNG LADY ACROSS THE WAY. The young lady across the way says it's a pity they couldn't have confined the railroad increases to freight rates and not have had them cost the general public anything.

SUCH IS LIFE

By O. B. JOYFUL

"Squire" says I. "Why is this the best time to study the book of nature?"

"Because autumn turns the leaves," says he.

"Right you are," says I. "But can you tell me what makes more noise than a pig under a fence?"

"Two," says he.

"Now," says I, "here's a puzzling problem: Brown has five children, and half are boys."

"So's the other half," says he.

"You are improving in arithmetic," says I.

"Yes," says he, "but I can't figure."

"Here's to Your Good Health"

That is the idea you'll get out of BLATZ. It's so lively, sparkling, effervescent that you can see the joy thrills in every bubble and feel them, too, as they trickle down your throat, cooling, quenching, refreshing, exhilarating, all the way down.

THIRD PARTY STUFF

I'LL TAKE MORE THAN THE WOMEN'S SUPPORT TO UPHOLD THE THIRD PARTY !!!

Oh Henry!! ... impossible," says I. "But it was done," says he. "When?" says I. "When Noah's rooster crowed in the ark," says he.

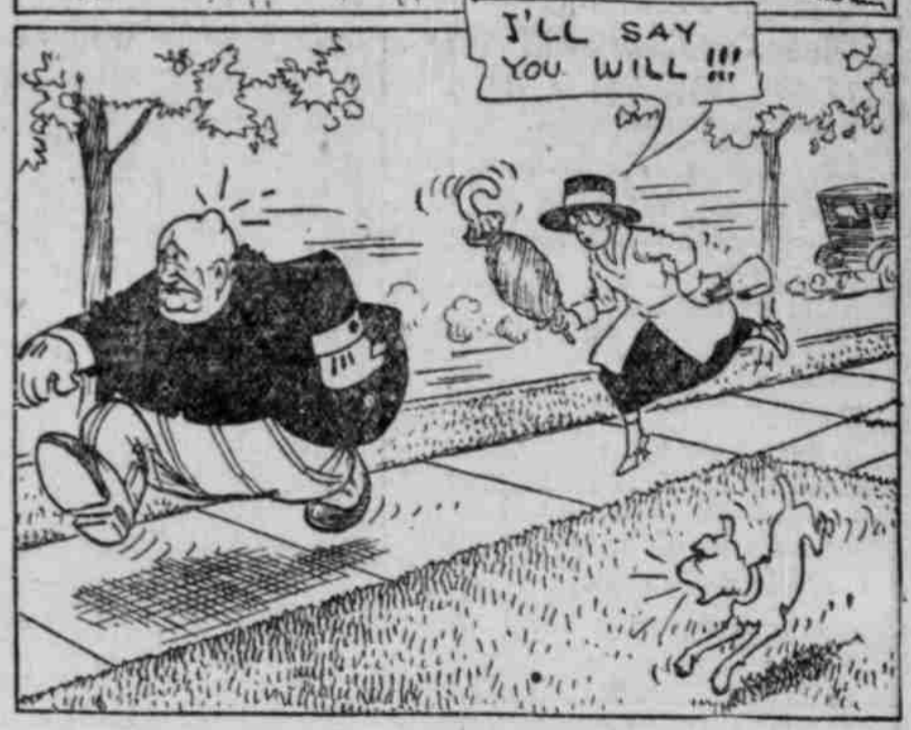

INCHES FROM THE GOLDEN-PLATED RULE

By Lillian Paschal Day

SWEARING VS. PROFANITY My neighbor has a fine husband. He's a kind father and all that. But he WILL swear. At least SHE calls it swearing. He doesn't—says he's not profane. "That's taking God's name in vain. Plain damn is not profanity. It's merely a harmless expletive." His ultra-good wife sniffs. "You make it a harmful explosive." "Emphasis, my dear," says Husband. "Raise it to the superlative degree. Positive, dear—that's you. Comparative, damn—that's Sonny. Superlative, damn—that's Dad." She tried flattery. "Your lips are lovely, clear—cut. But swearwords soil them." He kissed her with them. "Soil's in your Puritan eye, dear. The naughty word choked her. She decided to try another tack. Sonny was in on it, also the cook. One evening Dad came home tired. Wiley met him smiling at the door. He kissed a smudge on her cheek. "Dirty-face!" he reproved. "Ben helping Bridget, Girly?" He sat down at table. The cloth was soiled and spotted. He unfolded his napkin. It was all coffee stains.
