SAUER WANTS TO INCREASE SPEED FOR DAVIS COURT

Speed, speed, more speed. That's Pete Sauer's sole ambition for his handicap match with Nick Davis court.

Speed alone will carry him to victory. That is the conclusion reached by Sauer and he has mapped out a training program that he believes will send him into the ring next Monday night fully 25 per cent faster than ever before.

"If I'm fast enough, Davis court will have the job of his life pinning my shoulders to the mat twice within the stipulated 90-minute period," Pete declared last night.

"Of course, I expect to wrestle a defensive match, but if opportunities present themselves, Phoenix fans will see me take the offensive. I'll give the big fellow a real run for his money. And I'll take lots of changes, too, if I see I have an opportunity to pin his shoulders to the canvass.

"A handicap match can be a very interesting affair, but I promise wrestling fans that this one will be different. I'm not going in there with the intention of keeping my two points off the mat and, if Lady Luck so says, of pinning my opponent."

Sauer is a confident. Sauer has a world of respect for the ability of Davis court. He indicates as much in his every word and action but he has more confidence in himself. He firmly believes that he can stay 90 minutes in a handicap match with any grappler in the country, save Joe Stecher, world's heavyweight champion.

Pete, among other things, has decided to discard his long trunks for the Davis court match. When he climbs through the ropes Monday night, he will be clad only in short tights and shoes. By discarding the long trunks, he believes that he will add materially to his speed.

A handicap wrestling match is a unique sporting event in this city and local fans are manifesting considerable interest in the scheduled bout. Tickets were placed on sale at the Doyle cigar store yesterday.

Arrangements were completed last night for the battle royal with five big husky negroes to do the battling. It's going to be a real battle royal, promoters declare, and they have offered a suitable purse to the one surviving member as an incentive to keep the fellows going at top speed.

At least one other event will be included on the program with a possibility of an added number in the form of a 6-round boxing match. All boxing matches are staged under the auspices of the American Legion.
