Entire State Joins City To Do Honor To Citizens Of Other Days — Reunion Begins This Morning

Welcome to the Pioneers! Today Phoenix, and through Phoenix the entire state, joins in a hand of greeting to those who laid the foundations upon which has been built the great state of Arizona. From every corner of the commonwealth the pioneers have come to this city to renew their memories of the days of long ago and to meet again with those who with them made history in the day that is gone.

Perhaps because of the fact that Arizona is the youngest state perhaps because the deeds of the early arrivals here have made a deeper impression upon the imagination than has been the case elsewhere, the pioneer has taken hold of the hearts of Arizonians in a distinctive manner. It did not come to a hand flowing with milk and honey, but he followed the western sun into a country of mountain range and desert, peopled with savages no less dangerous than the reptiles he found warming themselves in the sand, and filled with dangers such as the pioneers of other states rarely had to encounter.

Now, from every part of the state which they helped to make, the pioneers are coming to Phoenix. It is more than six months The Republic has been preparing a reunion for them and they have cooperated with a will. The reunion, then, begins this morning is being forward to us perhaps the greatest event of its kind ever held in the West. Pioneers from the vast spaces of the North are in the state as there are pioneers from the mountains of the East and the West. They have come from all the rich and famous, and they have come to listen, welcome extended by the entire state.

All City Extends Greeting

Co-operating with The Republican in its welcome in a special manner are the chamber of commerce and the various clubs, which have acceded to every request for assistance in the making of the reunion. This history, which will appear as a special edition of The Republican tomorrow morning, is not the usual
