THE PHOSPHORUS MATCH MUST GO

Recent investigations have shown that there are 283 industries which are a constant menace to the health of those employed in them; and better protection for the workers is being sought. One of the worst of these is the phosphorus match industry, which kills many workmen.

Chairman Underwood of the ways and means committee of congress has notified Congressmen Each of Wisconsin, who introduced the "match bill", one prohibiting the manufacture and sale of phosphorus matches, that his measure will have a hearing as soon as congress convenes. The committee already has received a statement from the Federation of Labor Legislation concerning the urgency of immediate action and pointing out that all other civilized nations have already put a ban upon the phosphorus match.

The reasons urged not only include the ghastly injury to those who handle matches in the manufacturing process, but the deaths of children who put the poisonous phosphorus into their mouths, as small children are sure to do.

Congressman Each now has hope that the bill will be passed. He has already put a ban upon the phosphorus match. The reasons urged not only include the ghastly injury to those who handle matches in the manufacturing process, but the deaths of children who put the poisonous phosphorus into their mouths, as small children are sure to do.

Dr. John E. Andrews, secretary of the American Association for Labor Legislation, made this statement, among others, to the committee: "The one of the most modern establishments owned by the same company since 1880, records of 40 cases of phosphorus poisoning were secured. Of this number, 16 resulted in permanent deformity through the loss of one or both jaws, and several cases resulted in death."

Chicago gives notice that it does not expect the stockyard smell to emanate from the local bench.

It is noted that Lorimer's Lincoln league did not cut any ice in Illinois at the November election.

If a woman gets equal recognition with the men in science and in jail, why should she not in politics?

The yellow peril of China appears to be waiting itself over into something very much more respectable.

Happy thought for today: A near-philosopher says that "a minister cannot win the poor by courting the rich."

The I-told-you-so citizen never lets his November opportunities go for naught. Have you met him since election day?

The New York school teachers have demonstrated that no rights are better protected than those which are self-protected.

Now that the duma members are speaking their minds, Nicholas does not have to employ spies to tell what he is up against.

Some men like to see three feet of snow on the ground before they order their winter coat, but no horse thinks they have horse sense.

Baltimore is ready for the democratic national convention, and all the other conventions it can get. Other convention-cities have the same fever.

Over in Great Britain they are adding the maggotorium to the out-of-door tuberculosis camps. It is hard on the maggots and trying to the patients.

Governor Foss says he did not spend money in the last campaign because his conscience would not let him. His enemies request him to please not make them laugh so hard!

Andrew Carnegie is looked up to as the American Santa Claus of his time; and as Christmas is approaching, Des Moines expresses the hope he will give her a new music hall.

Boston did not respond in 48 hours to the Red Cross' call for aid for China, so the society cabled one thousand from the reserve fund to Hinkow. Will the produced distress is not so appalling as the naturally inflicted sympathy.

Q.—How and to what extent were the Apostles inspired?

A.—There are some at the present day who believe that modern authors, teachers and poets are as fully inspired as were the Apostles. Even some of the clergymen apparently have the thought that they themselves are as authentic and reliable authorities and should be regarded as such.

THE MAN WHO TALKS

In the affairs of men looks figure more than most people think. Looks credit when they are right. Our minds and our habits make or mend appearance. It is not how we look to ourselves in our own mirror, but the reflections or acceptances, but how we look to the other fellow. Some faces mirror a compassionate soul, and some faces are just a temptation to fate.

It is more respectable to belong to the Bankers than to the Sons of Rest. The Sons of Rest are the tried and leafy empires that the Bankers work smart until they think it is time to bank, and then they go in their preferred disposition, which is to do nothing and to think of nothing under the sun—to just abide in silence and get acquainted with their own selves. Banking is not modern, but somewhat ancient, for Wordsworth has been denominated the president of the Bankers for all time, because he understood how to bank and what came of it, which he abalms for future generations in these words: "I think you, 'mid all this mighty sum of things, never speaking, nothing of itself will come, but we must still be seeking; unless I deem that there are powers which of themselves our mind impress. And we can feel this mind of ours in a wise easiness, in these words: 'Wordsworth recognized and realized the advantage of going into the silence which is being practiced and promoted today by the New Thinkers, who may yet see that banking is a good name for this exercise. It is more than rest—it is revelation."

Run the Hit Out.

A good ball player will always do it. Even if the hit is nothing but a little bump to the inside, he gets down to make the most of even a slim opportunity. It always pleases me to make the most of even a slim opportunity. It always pleases me to make the most of even a slim opportunity.

Let all such faint-hearted folk remember that the great successes have generally come to those who have, in their hearts, a certain amount of "stiffness." It is not the softness of the heart that counts, but the stiffness of the spine.

Do we understand the way of the leaves more than we understand the way of the winds? Most people have no interest in leaves, any more than they have in other things. They never wake up to the idea that about every-thing God has made differs from the rest.
