THREW AWAY $3,000. Pleasant View Guest Did Not Value Lump of Ambergris Found on Beach. Miss Helen A. Moffitt, daughter of Sergt. James H. Moffitt, of the Elmwood station, threw about $3,000 worth of ambergris into the ocean off Pleasant View a few days ago. She did not know what the ball of gray matter was that she kicked into the sea, but within a few minutes she learned it was ambergris, and on returning to the beach found a small piece of it which may have been detached from the mass she threw away.

Miss Moffitt returned to her hotel and told some guests about the object, which looked to her to be about the size of a football. From her description one guest said it was ambergris. She went back to the beach and found a small portion of it, and it proved to be ambergris.

When she returned to her home at 25 Phillips street, Providence, R. I., she told her father about her experience, and Sergeant Moffitt had her find analyzed. It proved to be ambergris of the best quality and is worth $300 a pound. The lump she threw into the sea weighed about 10 pounds.
