FLORIDA CITRUS EXCHANGE Your Mouth Waters When You See the Florida Citrus Exchange Oranges. A glance at the big, plump, richly colored fruit makes you want it. You see how large and rich it looks, and you can just imagine how it would taste—how you would enjoy tasting the sweet "liquid sunshine" stored in its pulp by the balmy sun of Florida. Florida Citrus Exchange oranges and grapefruit are as good as they look. They are the finest selection of Florida fruit. They are heavier than ordinary fruits; sweeter, because they are left on the trees until they are ripe; and juicier, because only tree-ripened fruit can be really rich and juicy. Don't let any person persuade you to buy inferior oranges and grapefruit—get the best. Look for This Box At Your Grocer's Grocers throughout the city are offering discriminating buyers the oranges and grapefruit produced by the Florida Citrus Exchange—a co-operative association of grove-owners. Your grocer can supply you with this superior fruit or get it for you. Cut the Cost of Living By Buying by the Box The grocer will be glad to sell you one orange—or a box. When you buy one you will want a box. Florida Citrus Exchange fruit—tree-ripened—keeps until used always juicy and sweet. Buy by the box and drink the juice—the ideal tonic. Every Orange a Good Orange—Every Grapefruit a Good Grapefruit—Tree-ripened, from Boxes Like This Tell your grocer you want Florida Citrus Exchange fruit, and refuse anything else. Other Florida fruit may be just as good, but the
