ARE AMERICAN GIRLS AFRAID TO RISK THEIR PRECIOUS NECKS?

American girls are too afraid to risk their necks; that is why the circus of today is composed in largest part of European artists. So says Ella Bradna, a beautiful Swiss girl, who with Fred Derrick, an English rider of note, figures in the Barnum & Bailey program, and she bases her claim upon the fact that there are few American women in the showstirring ring today. Almost all the circus performers are of foreign birth and training according to Miss Bradna, who has been a circus acrobate from early childhood, as were her mother and grandmother before her.

A PRETTY GOOD MAN WAS LONG AGO INDIAN

AS DR. EASTMAN DESCRIBED HIM IN A LECTURE AT REDDING

All His Later Vices Came About Through His Contact With White Race—No Settlement of Sanford Land Case.

Redding, May 28.—To correct some popular misconceptions regarding the kind of man the North American Indian was before he degenerated in consequence of his association with the white race was the aim of the lecture which Dr. Charles A. Eastman, a full blooded Sioux, gave at the Sanford school gymnasium last Saturday evening before a large audience which included the pupils of the Center and Ridge public schools. The lecturer wore a tribal costume of white buckskin and a feathered headpiece. Dr. Eastman asserted that in his original state the Indian was the most spiritual of all the races, being devout worshippers of the Great Mystery whose manifestations they were seeking in every tree, flower, animal and the rising and setting sun. In no sense, however, were they idolaters. All animals they called their brothers and no wild beast ever harmed them with the exception of the grizzly bear and the grizzly only in self defense. The lecturer then told a long tale of a grizzly which was brought up as a member of his own family. He told how the animal was the lecturer's playmate and sleeping mate—his little brother while a cub and his big brother when grown.

Generosity was one of the Indian's leading traits. If one of them returned from the chase with a deer he gave three-quarters of the venison to those who came back empty handed. What white man would give to a poor man his wages to associate with who were out of work and make such division a regular rule of conduct. In his system of government the Indian made choice of his leaders solely on the basis of ability. The authority was also divided among several so that no single leader should get the big head or have opportunity to commit the abuses which usually accompanied the exercise of one man, unregulated power. The Indian also had a philosophy of his own which did not come from books but from observation of the nature which he loved on such intimate and friendly terms. As an illustration of this Dr. Eastman told of some of the comments made by a party of sixteen Dakota chiefs whom he visited at Washington. The subject of the hurrying crowds in Chicago prompted one of them to remark: "These people do nothing but walk. In three years one-third will have walked themselves to death." Their visit to the Corcoran Gallery in Washington drew out this observation: "The white man cut down trees and tears the face of the earth. Then he makes a picture of what he has destroyed and admires it although he cared nothing for the original."

Physical culture and life in the open air upon the importance of which so much emphasis was now being laid, was another Indian matter of course. His fare was simple and his athletic exercises made him wonderfully hardy and capable of performing feats requiring astonishing endurance. Instead of receiving a warm bath their infants were rubbed with snow and then hung in a tree for a nap. The Indian had no knowledge of money values. Thus he made some use of wampum as a medium of exchange, but it served that purpose to a very limited extent. It was this disregard of the value of money that largely caused the Indian's undoing because he bartered his horses for trinkets, light colored cloths or whatever struck his fancy.

When the white man came the Indian was unselfish, religious, brave, loyal and abstemious, but the loss of childlike simplicity. Association with the white man imparted to him the vices of cruelty, greed, intemperance, deceit and other bad qualities by which he has been made by most unjustly judged. Dr. Eastman closed by warmly praising the Sanford school, especially commending the varied phases of outdoor life which was part of its system.

Following the lecture Dr. Eastman's daughter Irene appeared in an attractive Indian costume and sang charmingly and in a voice of rare sweetness a number of songs, one of them in the Indian language. The music also was adapted from Indian sources.

E. P. Sanford says that there is absolutely no foundation for the rumors alleging that a settlement has been made or attempted of the land condemnation suit in which he is a respondent. He also demurs to what has been printed on the subject because, as he explains, instead of the sum of $15,000 might give rise to the supposition that he stood ready to compromise on that basis. "Several of my acquaintances," continued Mr. Sanford, "have mentioned this figure and also figures considerably larger amounts which the opposing parties might properly agree upon. To all such suggestions I have preserved a strictly non-committal attitude. What overtures looking to a compromise have been made it will be time enough to discuss figures. So far there has been nothing in the way of such overtures. The water company brought the pending suit without even asking me at what price I would sell. Neither did they make a definite offer to my father, going only so far in this direction as to say what they considered the property worth."

How much further the water company intends to go in acquiring additional Pleasant Valley property the residents would very much like to know, but will probably not know until the present proceedings have reached a final conclusion. Below the Sanford dams are two dams, one owned by Mr. Heggman and the other by Miss Waterman, who would much regret their removal. It is also feared that the flooding of the lower part of the valley may be a part of the program for the future. The water company location for a dam was built at the old sawmill site on the property of A. L. Livermore and it is thought to be a certainty that a dam will be placed either there or at the old paper mill location in the dog's head stream. A wireless telegraph apparatus was installed at the Sanford School on Monday. It is the property of Kirk Sterna, one of the pupils, and has been transmitted messages a distance of about ten miles and record them from the station agent at Bethel and the other to J. H. Jennings, the West Redding merchant. The apparatus will transmit messages a distance of about ten miles and record them from a transmission point about 300 miles away.

The caterpillar is doing destructive work among the orchards in this locality, some of the trees being already stripped bare. Most people did not realize the danger from the pest until it was too late to apply a remedy as the worms have done little harm for several years. The city people having summer homes on the east side of the town have joined in hiring one of the power sprayers to spray the highway shade trees and thereby save their foliage from being destroyed by the caterpillars.

John Tucker has 400 chicks, the uncommon feature of the circumstance being the fact that all were hatched under hens and not by the incubator process.
N. F. Heggson has placed an ornamental sign post of rustic design at the four corners near his residence in Pleasant Valley. Besides the usual "directions" to other localities it bears the legend, "To Uncle John's 1,000 ft." The reference is to John G. Heggson, managing director for Arnold Constable & Co.

Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Sullivan welcomed a baby son last Saturday at their home below Sunset Hill.
Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Sturgis are enjoying tent life at frequent intervals on the land in Pleasant Valley which Mr. Sturgis lately bought from W. C. Sanford for a hungulow site. A water supply from a spring has been piped to the tent.
