

POLITICAL POINTERS

Sunday Work Mapped Out By The Affable Harry Durant.

The following are a few little campaign rumors that a Democrat newspaper man has heard going the rounds about Harold K. Durant, the republican nominee for senator, who will face up against the staunch and sturdy democrat, Attorney William Kennedy, on next Tuesday.

That Harry will be too busy to go to church to-morrow.

That Harry was not even "half shot" when that tick tack burst through his window on Halloween.

That Constable Everett R. Perkins is doing good work for Mr. Kennedy to repay Harry for his alleged efforts to do "Ray" in the recent town election.

That if Harry wins over Mr. Kennedy (if, mind you, he will show Sam Cowan his appreciation of Sam's sleepless night trips in his behalf by simply landing him a constabulary.

That Harry would very much like to have been a member of the local lodge of Free Masons—also that white balls elect and black balls reject in that organization.

That some of the liquor dealers in the outskirts are being led to believe that Harry will use his influence in case he is elected to keep the license fees as they are.

That some of the honor dealers in the center are being led to believe that in case of Harry's election he will lay awake nights trying to bring about high license.

That Harry has become such a linguist during this campaign that it is no trouble for him to switch off from the Swedish tongue to address the colored voters in "rag time."

That Harry would very much like to see photographs or diagrams similar to the room where that bullet (2) entered) of the ballots cast next Tuesday by George L. White, Warren L. Hall, Judge Covell and others.

That Harry can easily take the bun as far as promises are concerned, and that if promises are all that are required to secure votes, he will win in a canter.

That Harry is making capital out of the fact that he was assisted in presenting an out east young man, notwithstanding the fact that the arrest of the young man in question was made on a warrant issued by Harry and that Harry was paid by the city for prosecuting that same young man.

That Harry has suggested that special trolley cars might come in handy to bring the voters to the polls next Tuesday and that Harry can have the cars if he says the word. No conductor necessary.

That somebody is credited with making a remark that for $100 Harry could secure all the votes he wanted in a certain voting district—not the second.

That somebody wrote the Merchants association stating that if Harry were elected the factoring law would be changed so that a merchant's wages could be withheld at any time. Now a man must have $50 coming to him before it can be attached.

That Harry will be a good boy after next Tuesday.

That's all for now.

There will be a French republican rally at the headquarters of the American club at 253 Bank street this evening.

The Democratic association will hold an important meeting in their headquarters on Grand street to-morrow afternoon at 8 o'clock.

The Hebrew Democratic club will hold an important meeting at their rooms at the corner of Chaffin and Canal streets to-morrow afternoon at 1 o'clock. All Hebrews are requested to attend.

Dr. Omer LaRue, of Putnam, will address the French voters in St. Patrick's hall on East Main street to-morrow evening at 8 o'clock.

Mr. Henry M. Hemlinway, one of the rising young lawyers who have offices in the Old Fellows building, was nominated for representative by the democrats of Watertown last evening.

The indications are that he will be elected. Mr. Hemlinway has promised to do all that is reasonable for the advancement of the town of his constituents, whereas, on the other hand, the republican nominee has put himself on record, it is claimed, for being opposed to public improvements or anything that will cost the taxpayers a single cent, no matter what the profits or interests may be.

Of the two candidates, Mr. Hemlinway appears to be the popular one, and everybody is saying that he will be elected by a large majority. As his family is identified with the main industries of the town, it is but natural to expect that he would be interested in promoting its welfare.

The polls will open Tuesday morning at 6 o'clock and will close at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. There will be but two ballots and both will go in the same envelope. The town committee requests as many as possible to vote early. Sick or disabled democrats will please send their names and addresses to the town committee and they will be taken to and from their homes in carriages. When you step up to the ballot box call out the name of the street you live on and the number of your house and who the checker is looking for the street and number you will have an opportunity to draw your breath and also tell your name. These things, while they may appear trifling to the uninitiated, are very important, and people should keep them in mind. If you mention your name first you put the checker to the trouble of firing a lot of questions at you, the street and number for instance, and in this way considerable valuable time is lost and many are not able to get a chance to vote at all.

LILLEY'S ENTERPRISE. Editor Democrat: I have read with considerable amusement as well as interest the numerous epistles published by George L. Lilley in the local papers. The result of so doing was to leave the impression that the writer was a man of sterling integrity, honest beyond doubt in thought word or action, a man surrounded so thoroughly with impenetrable walls of responsibility, reliability and all that sort of thing that he had no need of reason to fear anything

Some Stray Leaves From A Reporter's Note Book. In about one week people will be paying their election bets. The following is one of the many unique wagers that have been made during this campaign: "If Bryan be elected Judge will repeat without charge every advertisement of at least a quarter of a page in its industrial number. In a circular letter making this offer, W. F. Cook, advertising manager of Judge, sends fac simile autographs of prominent republicans who ordered the industrial number in quantities."

When George Fred Williams was talking about Porto Rico in the auditorium Friday night and asked the audience to imagine themselves the inhabitants of Porto Rico, and likened the vice-presidents to sat behind him on the stage to the congress of the United States, ex-Postmaster Charles C. Comerford leaned back in his seat and remarked to a reporter who sat near him that he had a mind to move that McKinley be impeached for his disregard for the constitution in planting the flag where the constitution cannot go, and declaring war against China without the consent of this body, and give the whole shooting match Hall Columbia for their inhuman treatment of the Filipinos. "It may be the only opportunity of our life," he said, his sides splitting with laughter, "to be heard in the White House. Go over and ask Congressman Witkowski, who occupied a seat across the way, 'if he'll second my motion.' It's a big jump for the whole of us," said E. B. Kelley, looking over his shoulder and winking at the speaker. "The speaker told the crowd to consider themselves congressmen."

Talking about the persons that appear in the daily papers, particularly the New York publications, a friend of the As You Like It man produced the following which he thinks are about as good as any of them: A German publisher inserted in many newspapers a "personal" saying that a rich nobleman of high rank desired to marry a lady who resembled the heroine of a novel that the publisher had just brought out. Sales were immense. Extra clerks were hired to handle the answers to the fictitious aristocrat advertisement. This recalls a similar stratagem of a Yankee tailor in Buenos Ayres. He announced that a young woman of beauty and fortune wished as a husband a man of pleasing presence and honorable character. It was important that he should be a stylish dresser. The Argentine swells did not stop to think that beautiful and wealthy girls do not, as a rule, have to seek husbands through the personal column. The replies were numerous, and afforded to the tailor fine food for circular distribution. He reasoned that the young men who would snap at such a bait could scarcely fail to be good customers. Several years ago, a wag in Paris published in several journals the following: "Leave the city at once. My husband has discovered everything." That day the trains to Belgium were all overcrowded.

There was a Halloween party in town Wednesday night that none of the reporters got hold of, and it was a good job for some parties who took part in it. The crowd consisted of a dozen or more couples, and after trying different games they concluded to go out and have some sport with the neighbors. They had not gone far when they met an old man with what they supposed to be a pall of beer in his hand, and one of the girls "stumped" him to sit 'em up. The old gentleman was not in the right frame of mind for fooling, and he passed on muttering something which was interpreted by young fellows regarded as an offense, and he wheeled after the man with the pall and took him by the coat collar and wanted to know what he had said. Then the whole crowd, girls and all, looked around and started to pull the young man away, but before they succeeded the old fellow had emptied the contents of the pall, which by the way happened to be a quart of molasses, onto the gallant youngster's head, and stood on one side of the street cursing and swearing like a madman. Meanwhile the molasses was trickling all over the young fellow's head and face, and the girls got so excited over the affair that they ran back to the house, screaming as if they were being pursued by a spook, leaving the molasses man to take care of himself as best he could.

Dr Croft of Washington, D. C., who spoke here during the present week for the democrats, is a good talker and a capital story teller. When he had the audience almost spellbound so that any thing he might say would have evoked applause, he thought it a good time to spin one of his yarns. He was telling about a fellow named Smith who is doing some missionary work in this state for the republicans, and quoted one of Smith's remarks which was to the effect that trusts in themselves are not bad. "Well," he exclaimed, looking about him as if he had heard that the hall was going to topple to the ground, "who ever heard of such a saying? Trusts are not bad in themselves! That's true, that's true, but the trouble with them is that they don't stay in themselves. They are far reaching and the people of this country are beginning to find that out to their sorrow. When I saw this in the papers it reminded me of that very estimable lady once said to a few friends at a sewing society meeting. They were chatting as women are wont to on such occasions and finally the subject drifted out to bed-bugs, when the particular member of the party whom I have in mind said that bed-bugs were not bad in themselves, and being that so far as she knew the objection to them was based upon the way they get a living." The story took well and after that the doctor could have entertained the audience all night supposing he did nothing but sit where they could look at him.

A WARM SUBJECT

There's nothing in the world we're so much interested in as coal. We've studied it for years. It may sound queer to speak of coal buying and selling as a science, but that's what we've made it. Two important discoveries made it. We have made it that complete satisfaction to our customers pay best, and that the way to win business is to deserve it.
