The Waterbury board of health is trying to have enacted an ordinance for the suppression of unnecessary noises. Under the terms of the measure the blowing of steam whistles, except on locomotives, the ringing (contrary to a request of church or tower bells within 500 yards of a place where a person is sick, the sounding of gongs except on trolley cars, singing in the streets, shouting by itinerant vendors and the use of vehicles with wheels on loose axles, are all made penal offenses.

OBJECTS TO ONE NIGHT STANDS

Sarah Bernhardt objects to one night stands, and so strenuously that most of those upon the route list of her coming tour with Constant Coquelin have been stricken off. The French actress cannot abide the hurry and bustle incident to stops of a few hours in country villages, even though the inhabitants thereof are desirous to see her and at her own price.

Three towns thus disappointed are Los Angeles, Cal. and San Antonio and Galveston, Tex. in each of which one performance had been advertised. They were to have been breaks in the long ride from New Orleans to San Francisco, but Mme Bernhardt has signified that she does not care to leave her car between the Crescent City and the Golden Gate, and she has accordingly canceled dates to the week's engagement in the latter place. As her desires during the American trip are practically law, in so far as the coming tour with Constant Coquelin is concerned, plans have been altered to suit her.

That her word is something quite final was illustrated early in the week over a difference of opinion between herself and Coquelin as to the manner in which the celebration should be conducted on the stage. She gave directions that the lights should be arranged in a certain scene in which she and Coquelin appeared together. He went to the electrician with contrary directions, not, however, with any intention of countermanding her orders. He did not know she had spoken.

The man at the switchboard did not speak of his previous instructions, but he refused to obey her orders. She told his troubles to the stage director, who in turn went to the manager. When the latter heard how matters stood he said: "What Mme Bernhardt says goes."

It would be a mistake, however, to give the impression that there is any strain in the relations of the joint stars. For all this it is known that when the contract was made, the contract with Maurice Grau stipulates that there shall be one private Pullman divided between her and Coquelin; one furnished with double set of conveniences so that each may have absolute privacy.

Mme Bernhardt's objection to this plan is that it will not allow her enough room. She desires accessibility to as many of her admirers as possible, and she calculates that twice as many can be at her command with a whole car as there would be if she had only half.

If she has one undivided she will have to pay for it herself, the management will not go beyond the stipulations of the bond. It is said she has a representative trying to strike a bargain for the private car of a well known railroad official.

TO ACT LIKE A LADY.

The latest addition to the city's educational institutions is a school where young women can learn to walk, stand and loiter elegantly. It is directed by a bright woman who undoubtedly has a clear understanding of human nature. Besides classes for maidens, there are special classes for grown women. The rates are equal to those of a college, and the instruction is said to be thorough and complete.

Most of the pupils are people who have come from the country or suburbs to the city, although a few belong to the class that started life in the tenements, and by successful enterprise or economy have risen to the bourgeois class. Many of the older scholars desire to be instructed in positions which they have seen upon the stage or else in books, and no matter how unusual or painful it may be, if they think it is up to date they are bound to master it.

The curriculum is quite long. It includes calisthenics, special exercises, dancing and conversation. Every possible occurrence in a drawing room, a dining room, or a boudoir is imitated and rehearsed ad infinitum. Especial attention is paid to the hands and the feet, these being, according to the teacher, the most noticeable members of the feminine outfit. Even after a scholar has learned to stand and sit correctly, she will assume poses which her upper and lower extremities which incline to rusticity or vulgarity.

GAME WHILE YOU WAIT. One day this fall a Connecticut man who lives in a town not many miles from Hartford for dinner a partridge which had flown in through the window, destroying a plate glass window and killing himself. It seems that prairie chickens have the same suicidal habit. The Ravall, Mont, Republican says:

The people about the Ravall hotel were treated to a rather strange experience last Wednesday, and one which could scarcely be gotten by any other means. A man of the name of... The people in the kitchen were startled just before noon by the crash of falling glass from one of the dining room windows, and at first thought that some malicious or careless person had thrown a stone through it. In fact, one of the girls in the laundry said she had seen the stone fly across the lawn and through the window. Mrs Green called her husband and they hastened to the dining room, where to their great surprise they found a prairie chicken gasping its last on the floor, its throat cut with the glass through which it had come. The only surmise is that the chicken had become so frightened at something that it had hit its head and dashed into the window without really knowing where it was going. The force with which it struck may be in a measure realized when it is told that the glass which it crashed through is a heavy plate glass, ten feet square, and of similar experience was had a couple of weeks ago, when a duck, seemingly as badly rattled as the chicken, dove against the flag pole of the hotel and dropped quivering and dying upon the roof.

A GORGEOUSLY BOUND Work of art has just been issued at an outlay of over $100,000, for which the publishers desire a manager in this country, also a good soldier, and pay to the right party. TIT FOR TAT.

Sold a young and tactless husband To his inexperienced wife: "If you should give up leading Such a fashionable life, And devote more time to cooking— How to mix and when to bake— Then perhaps you might make pastry Such as mother used to make." And the wife, resenting, answered: "For the worm will turn, you know; If you would give up horses— And a score of clubs or so— To devote more time to business— When to buy and when to stake— Then perhaps you might make money Such as father used to make." —Boston Journal.

TO LITERARY ASPIRANTS.

"My father strongly advised me against a literary career," said Julian Hawthorne, in a recent conversation with a representative of Success, who had asked for his advice to young writers. "He also pointed out its hard work and small remuneration. I well knew that anything I might write would, as a matter of course, be compared with the best of the world's engineering. My duties included some work on a canal located on a mosquito belt, where the climate, too, was uninvited to myself and family. I gave it up, and took up my pen simply to try my hand at it. I sold it to Harper's Magazine for such a large sum of money that I decided then to write for a living. My life has since been fraught with the hardest kind of work."

"The idea that good literary work is done by the talented without great labor—in preparation, at least, —has exploded time and again. Every one of our great authors has succeeded with his own pen, so that it is wrong in a spirit of love mingled with the most rigid self-criticism. Without the real itch for writing, and the courage and patience for self-criticism, one should never undertake this career. The first step is to get a story. The next is to be neither flattered by praise nor depressed by criticism. If a man of genius listens too much to outside comments, he is liable to be influenced so that he will do just what he does not know the public but he is happy in his own work, and he will acquire at least the freedom of inspiration and stamp his work with his own individuality."

"That the literature of to-day is not up to the standard of the past, may be laid at the door of our great magazines, which compel a writer to conform to their schemes. Write accordingly to the spirit of the times. Do not try to please the periodicals. Only writers who have gained great popularity can defy the notions of the editors."

"Mr Kipling, the greatest short story writer since the early days of Bret Harte, was fortunate in striking an entirely new vein. He swept all set rules of story writing to the winds, and has succeeded in stamping his work with a masculine vigor entirely new to the story world. His stories are full of fresh life, and every year there springs up around him a new crop of imitators. If he has a fault, it is his technicality in giving life to a piece of machinery. His minute descriptions of a machine are apt to confuse the average reader."

"In the great hurry of the day, authors who have suddenly achieved popularity hasten to put their works into type. But, alas! it pays to write to please the periodicals. Only writers who have gained great popularity can defy the notions of the editors."

"There is but little excuse for the novel with an avowed moral purpose as it is written to-day. Its obvious aim enfeebles it, and its mission is always doubtful. The great delusion of the author is that such a work affords the most profitable outlet for his pen. His prominence should be respected, and this often demands a modification of the plot."

"To acquire a good style, read the Bible and classic literature, study character, and learn to express yourself clearly; but beware of too much affectation. Do not be misled by the judge of your own writing only after a lapse of time. After your fervor has cooled, you may be able to subject it to impartial criticism. That which you are reasonably sure is passing fair, is only fair when you are surprised to see was created by your pen. If you would really learn the value of your books, have them published unheralded. You may then profit by the reception."

COULDN'T BEAT HIM.

"I think there should be a law against publishing lies," said the innocent faced man, as he laid down his paper and heaved a sigh. "Have you discovered a lie?" was asked by a fellow passenger. "I'm sure of it. A man who was on a steamer when she was wrecked claims to have swum a distance of forty miles in four hours. I know that is a physical impossibility. I myself was once on a steamer lost off coast and at that time I was called a champion swimmer. I swam and swam and swam, but I didn't swim no forty miles in four hours. How far did you swim?" "Thirty-nine miles, to a foot, sir, and any man in this world who says he has swum forty is a liar, sir, and the truth isn't in him, sir!"
