Washington General Has Opened a Highway to Tokio
Over Which Marines Hope He Will Lead Them

By Joseph H. Baird

For months long search in the great maps had brought the General ever more near to his goal, and finally, at last, he stood alone on the step of victory. Behind him the enemy waited and trembled, ready to strike at once...

The General, Major D. H. Hill, moved into the front lines of the Pacific front. In the battle of the Pacific, Hill was the head of a group of troops who had been working for months to prepare for the invasion of the Japanese island of Tokio. Hill's forces were the most highly trained and equipped of all the General's groups.
