SOCIETY TABLEAUX A GREAT SUCCESS

Theatre Packed From Pit to Dome for Charity.

SPLENDID PERFORMANCES GIVEN

Spontaneous Applause From Enthusiastic Audience.

THOSE PARTICIPATING.

"The Reward of Amaryllis" and the Tableaux "Passing of Time" Presented, Under the Direction of Mrs. Barney and Mrs. Hopkins.

"Success" in great glowing letters blazed everywhere at Chase's Theatre last night, when the entertainment for the benefit of the National Junior Republic, the Diet Kitchen, and the Associated Charities was given by the society matrons and maids of Washington, under the direction of Mrs. Albert Clifford Barney and Mrs. Archibald Hopkins.

It blazed from pit to dome, for never before was there such an array of diamonds sparkling in the uppermost balcony, casting down on the more fortunately located persons below the glint of jewels worn by those whose interest in the charities was just as great, but who had not hastened days and days ago to pre-empt a chair or two on the lower floor. It was reflected back and forth from the boxes and throughout the auditorium. Had one's gaze been directed into the grandest kaleidoscope that the genius of man could conceive, the scene of color and beauty would not have been more entrancing than was this representative gathering in the capital of the nation, of its fair women and gallant men, assembled in the name of charity.

Success a Foregone Conclusion.

The spontaneous response of leading residents of the city, as soon as the first mention of the performance was publicly made, predetermined this success, but hardly the most optimistic of all those who contributed of their time, their talent and their influence toward this end could have hoped for such a magnificent triumph as was achieved.

The performance was given without a flaw, and the participants acquitted themselves with such unusual credit that a society stock company for private ballroom performances next winter would not be regarded as at all an unusual outcome by anyone who saw last evening's "court show."

The audience was not only representative locally; it was cosmopolitan. "If there is any member of the Diplomatic Corps who is not here tonight, I do not know him," said one of the popular young diplomats, as he strolled through the theatre with a shepherdess just from the stage, during an intermission.

"At any rate, I will not know him after this, if I find such a one," he added, "it only proves once more—this performance tonight—what we diplomats always have said, that the American women are divine."

Doing Unique Things for Charity.

In the name of charity one may do unique things, and by the same token, as by the wafting of a wand conventionalities disappear and human kindness crowds beyond the hospitable portals of charity's temporary temple all thoughts save those that are gentle, and good, and unselfish.

It was so last night. The playhouse became the temple of charity, all society came to pay its devotion in material contributions and ephemeral applause, and beautiful women, with a taste for the unusual, claimed the page's place in the foyer and sold programmes and boutonnieres of the daintiest flowers for a quarter each—or more.

If one did not have a 25-cent piece it was just as well to give up willingly a half-dollar or a bill, for it was all for "sweet charity," you know. And even if one is really not aware of what that name covers he may rest assured that one of the omissions which is not regarded as a sin is forgetting to ask for the change.

Mr. De Koven in His Element.

Promptly at the announced time—8:45 o'clock—Mr. Reginald De Koven raised aloft his baton, and the orchestra selected and trained, and specially augmented for this particular occasion, swept into the strains of the latest success of the director himself, the overture from "Maid Marian." If there was anyone who came hurrying to the theatre a bit late—and there were just a few—feeling just a bit tremulous lest the performance proper should have begun as promptly as predicted by those in charge, Mr. De Koven's few minutes of overture saved them a great disappointment. But, fortunately, perhaps, for their peace of mind, they were unable to appreciate what they lost in missing the music—and Mr. De Koven.

No one who looked at the energetic director once but looked again. Even a deaf and dumb man would have known that it was no ordinary performance, for the performers' benefit, after one such glance. It couldn't have been done so thoroughly for mere money, this lending of Mr. DeKoven's. It was for charity, with all the heart and soul and mind and strength of the director, and everyone who watched Mr. DeKoven from any part of the great auditorium knew it.

A Splendid Rendition.

"The Reward of Amaryllis," Mrs. Burton Harrison's pantomime, needs, of course, no explanatory note of introduction. The rustic stage setting was admirably done and formed a most effective background of green with a contrasting touch of brown and white.

The recitative by the Muse, Miss Wetmore, in flowing robe of white, was precise and effective within range, though to auditors in the far seats and in the upper gallery probably a bit faint. To fill a theatre auditorium with the speaking voice is such a task for one unused to that work that discerning critics complimented Miss Wetmore considerably. The Singing Nymph, Mrs. Shade, was greeted with generous handclappings also for her dainty solo part, "light as the air" in its swinging melody.

Nymphs in the Pantomime.

The dance of the nymphs quickly followed. Sixteen buds of this and the past few seasons vied with one another in presenting the most graceful trippings to and fro and intricate Deisartean variations which have been seen on a public stage in Washington. The maids who represented the nymphs were:

Miss Hopkins, Miss Goldsborough, Miss Elizabeth Parker, Miss Mattingly, Miss Davis, Miss Howell, Miss Lincoln, Miss Catlin, Miss Chacon, Miss Bailey, Miss Barney, Miss Worthington, Miss Merritt, Miss Train, Miss Parrish, Miss Miller.

CONGRESS OF THE D. A. R. CONVENES.

of Chicago of writing an anarymous letter. It is understood that she endeavored to discover the popular sentiment by entering the race this time.

A vice regent for Maryland was also elected.

The afternoon session was called to order by the president general at 2 o'clock. The credentials committee made the following report, which was adopted:

"The credentials committee has the honor to report that there has been a careful verification of the reports of Chapter Regents and an earnest effort made that each chapter should have full and just representation.

"In accordance with the laws governing the body there are one president general, 29 vice presidents general, and 9 active officers, 47 State regents, 600 chapter regents, and 240 delegates entitled to vote in the eleventh continental congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution, making a total of 917 votes, an increase of 57 over last year.

Many of the chapters bear the honored names of those noble men and women, who, by their patriotic devotion and self-sacrifice, through those seven long years of the American Revolution made the congress possible. It seems most fitting, that the roll should be called by chapters, thus commemorating not only those sacred names, but emphasizing the record of historical places.

"By the recommendation of the board the official reader will call the roll in this manner: State regents responding for States, and chapter regents for chapters, subject to the approval of congress.

"The credential work includes this year 117 letters received and 181 letters written."

The report was signed by Miranda B. Tullock, Martha L. Sternberg, Mary S. Lockwood, Juha T. C. McBlair, and Gertrude B. Sarwin.

After the report was adopted the roll was called by Miss Jeanette Richards, the reader.

Mrs. Donald McLean, of New York, was then recognized chairman. She spoke of the assassination of the late President McKinley, and offered the following resolution of sympathy to his wife:

Resolution Condoling Mrs. McKinley

"Whereas, This meeting of the Continental Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution is the first since the death of the late President McKinley, and

Whereas, This society represents the pure American spirit of the women of the nation, that nation which gives liberty but not license to its citizens; therefore be it

Resolved, That this Continental Congress, in meeting assembled, does, as its first business record its desolation of the crime which removed from life the late President McKinley, and its abiding sympathy with Mrs. McKinley; and, be it further

Resolved, That such expressions of sympathy from this body, be conveyed to her whose loss is unutterable."

The resolution was passed unanimously by standing vote.

The report of the programme committee, made by Mrs. George M. Sternberg, chairman, showed that only a few unimportant changes had been made in the one originally agreed upon. With the changes the report was unanimously adopted.

The next matter for consideration was the question of amendments. The hour was getting late, and as the meeting could not last later than 5 o'clock, owing to the entertainment held there last night, it looked as though no action would be taken in regard to them.

Then Mrs. Miller, of Washington, sprung her surprise by making a motion that the Congress do not adjourn but take a recess. The efforts of the national officers, who had been at work among the delegates, proved unavailing, and the motion was carried. The question can, therefore, be considered today, and many important amendments which have been held up for several years will be acted upon.

The announcement of the committee on recommendations of national officers will be heard today.

Address of Welcome.

At the opening of the congress yesterday morning Mr. Fairbanks, president general, called the convention to order and delivered an effective address of welcome.

"It has often been asked by the uninformed, perchance skeptical, why do the Daughters of the American Revolution have this yearly congress?

"It is known to all that the Daughters of the American Revolution come here in order to exchange their views on their own government, to formulate laws which shall bring nearer to perfection its working powers in all chapters making up its grand union. To receive reports from all parts of America, advices of what is being accomplished by every chapter, every member.

"There has grown up a strong belief, as it is the highest authority, the Continental Congress, is to act as a court in which any daughter in the society may seek redress, in fact it may be considered to all intents the present Court of Appeals of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

"Another object of the Continental Congress is to deepen the interest and exalt the power of the society which it represents. These purposes may be aided by listening to the reading of the 'reports' from the different States, of the work they have already accomplished, that which they are doing now, that which they may hope to do in the future. Even the stories of their failures may be of some value, may serve as a guard or incentive.

In conclusion Mrs. Fairbanks said: "Daughters of another clime, Daughters of a far different and grander civilization, Daughters of the American Revolution, you may find in this ancient practice an exalted example, so let it be your sacred duty to hold eternal vigil that the lamp of liberty may forever shine, from a modern temple where are taught the lessons of enlightened freedom, a temple dedicated to the services of our cherished native land, to love and fraternity among its people."

The Response by Mrs. Swift.

Mrs. Fairbanks' address was interspersed with applause, kindly reference to Mrs. McKinley meeting with specially sympathetic response in the hearts of the audience.

Mrs. John T. Swift, of California, responded to the address of the president, on the part of the society, reading first a letter from the California chapter.

"Men have not been over eager to assist in this patriotic enterprise, for the reason that they are in the habit of watching the proceedings of congresses and conventions, and heretofore have not had reason to admire the way in which we have, sometimes, conducted our's.

"But, Madame President, we pledge you our sacred honor that the second congress of the twentieth century shall be conducted in a spirit of justice and fairness, and we shall endeavor to make a reputation for ourselves as an orderly body of dignified women."

Plans for Continental Hall.

The most important business matter that will come up for consideration is the proposition for the erection of a building for the sole use of the society.

(Copyrighted by Clinedinst.)

MRS. CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,
President General D. A. R.

It is to be known as Continental Hall, and is to be built on a plot of ground not as yet selected.

About $5,000 is in hand as a nucleus fund for the project, and a plot on Connecticut Avenue between H and I Streets, adjoining the Corcoran House, is believed to be most favored by the Daughters. The price of this land is $100,000. Some of the members are in favor of Congress donating the land upon which to erect the building, while others insist that the pride of the society will not admit of it becoming an object of seeming charity.

Three Hundred Real Daughters.

One of the most interesting features of the annual meetings of the Daughters of the American Revolution is the report of the number of real daughters or members whose fathers fought in the Revolutionary War. There are now about 300 of these enrolled in the society, and several of them are present at this congress.

A movement to pension these women, some of whom are poor in worldly goods, has been on foot for some time, and Senators Hoar and Lodge of Massachusetts have promised to lend their aid in securing the passage by Congress of a bill to this effect.

Membership Over Forty Thousand.

The total membership of the society is now 40,000, there having been 3,850 new members enrolled during the new year. About 800 delegates are present, and as each delegate has an alternate, and the regent of each State chapter has the privilege of the floor these and the other Daughters and visitors crowd the theatre to the roof. This being the largest congress ever held by the society, a full day will be required to verify credentials and arrange the delegations in their proper places.

Owing to the constant and rapid growth of the society the increasing number of delegates to the annual congress has become a serious problem, and it is possible that some amendment of the constitution of the society will be adopted looking to restrictions in this line which will reduce the number of delegates 50 per cent.

OBSERVED AT THE D. A. R. CONGRESS

Mrs. Fairbanks a Good Parliamentarian.

St. Peter at the Golden Gate—Hard Worked and Obliging Pages—Mrs. McLean's McKinley Resolution.

Mrs. Charles W. Fairbanks, the president general of the national society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, had ample opportunity to demonstrate to the Daughters her eminent fitness for the responsible position with which she was entrusted last year by the Tenth Continental Congress. There are many members even among those who worked against her election as president general most assiduously who now admit that she makes an ideal presiding officer, firm, obliging, and always collected.

"Of course," one of her former antagonists remarked yesterday afternoon, "she hasn't had much opportunity as yet to show how she will conduct herself and congress when matters begin to get serious—when things get lively, you know—when everybody talks, and everybody asks to be heard."

A Good Parliamentarian.

Mrs. Fairbanks appears to be a well-posted parliamentarian. She consults Mrs. Brown, whose services as paid parliamentarian have been secured for this year's congress, on few occasions. Mrs. Fairbanks has a pleasant voice, which can be distinctly heard and understood all over the house.

The attendance at yesterday's sessions in the gallery reserved for the public was no comparison to the crowd that filled the place last year, but it is expected that the suffragists' convention now attracts many of those who after tomorrow will make their appearance at the Daughters of the American Revolution convention.

The State regents at former congresses occupied seats on the stage. This year they are assigned to seats in front of the stage, where the representatives of the press in former years wrote their stories. The press this year is accommodated on the stage, in the rear of the places occupied by the general officers.

St. Peter at the Golden Gate.

Mr. S. Z. Stokes, assistant treasurer of Chase's Grand Opera House, is doing duty as gatekeeper at the entrance to the house. He scrutinizes everyone who applies for admission, and some of the Daughters have dubbed him "St. Peter at the Golden Gate." The members, before they enter the hall, must pass through a gate of chain brass, burnished like shining gold, whence the zobriquet "St. Peter at the Golden Gate."

A large sign displaying in conspicuous black letters the word, "Silence" is placed in a prominent position at the entrance to the hall. Its effect on the members, so far has not been very marked.

The Daughters have taken precautions to have fire and police protection at hand in case necessity should arise to have their immediate services. A member of the Fire Department is on duty in the wings of the stage, and C. H. Murphy, No. 267, was detailed on police duty.

An Industrious Page.

Miss Emily Eyre Baker-Wilson, as page to the president general, was continuously kept busy yesterday delivering messages to and from her chief. Miss Wilson is a highly accomplished, beautiful young lady, and is a great favorite with the members.

When Mrs. Donald McLean, of New York, asked the floor on a question of personal privilege silence and expectancy overspread the assembly. While she read her resolution on the death of the late President, everybody paid the utmost attention to her. She was heartily applauded when she finished.

During the afternoon session the Alabama delegation requested the privilege to occupy seats near the front. The request was granted by Mrs. Fairbanks. It is complained that the voice of the official reader, Miss Janet Richards, can scarcely be heard at the farther end of the house.

How all the delegates can be accommodated on the floor of the house is a question which is very perplexing to Mrs. Richardson, the chairman of the seating committee. The floor has a seating capacity of 510, and there are 917 delegates entitled to a seat on the floor.

An Interesting Discussion.

One of the questions that came up during the afternoon yesterday and claimed the undivided attention of the Daughters was the Chapter Warren (of Illinois) embroglio. Word had been passed around that the matter would come up during the afternoon, and some members who had engagements with their dressmakers preferred to forego this most important mission in order to be present when the Illinois chapter dispute came up. Those in the rear of the house rose to their feet and stood for over fifteen minutes while the discussion was going on.

Miss Annie Greenlees, one of the young lady pages, through her charming manners and politeness, has had thrust upon her more work than she can handle with proper care. She is very obliging and is exceptionally well posted on matters pertaining to the congress.

The Stars and Stripes are the prevailing decorations throughout the house, but not exclusively. Colors of Continental regiments are festooned around the galleries and balconies.

TRIAL OF THE ILLINOIS.

Naval Board Reports Warship First Class in Material Respects.

The report of the naval board of inspection on the official final trial and inspection of the battleship Illinois on her run from Hampton Roads to Tompkinsville last week was received by the Navy Department yesterday.

The usual number of defects were discovered by the board, but the vessel was found to be first class in every material respect.

A two hours' full speed trial under natural draft developed an aggregate indicated horse power of 8,862. During that time 16,170 pounds of New River coal were used an hour.

On account of the extreme cold and the fact that the guns and their mounts were covered with ice, it was considered inadvisable to test the batteries. The report of a previous test of them was accepted by the board.

The machinery worked splendidly.

TWO SAFES CRACKED.

Robbers Held Watchman Still at Pistol's Point.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Feb. 17.—Two safes in the street railway company's office in Northampton were blown open early this morning and $1,000 in cash taken.

Five masked men held up the watchman and kept him covered by revolvers while they worked on the safes. The safes were blown open and the explosion attracted the attention of people who saw the robbers drive toward Hatfield.

Whistles were blown to arouse the people.

The police of all the surrounding cities and towns have been notified and the chase is a hot one.

CURRENT EVENTS IN ALEXANDRIA

Tercentenary of the Founding of Jamestown.

Mass Meeting Held in Interest of Securing Celebration for City—Plans for Paying Municipal Debts.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Feb. 17.—A Mass meeting was held in the opera house tonight, and preliminary steps taken toward securing for the city of Alexandria a fitting exposition and celebration to be known as the ter-centenary celebration, marking the settlement by the English at Jamestown in 1607. The proposed celebration will be held in some city in the State in the year 1907.

The meeting, however, was far from being an enthusiastic one, there being only about one hundred people present. The scheme is being pushed by Mr. A. J. Wedderburn.

The meeting was called to order by Col. K. Kemper shortly after 8 o'clock, with the following on the stage: Mayor George L. Simpson and Messrs. A. Kemper, Charles Bendheim, James E. Clements, A. J. Wedderburn, and James H. Loh, the last two named of Alexandria County.

Upon motion of Mr. Kemper, Mayor Simpson was elected chairman of the meeting. He briefly stated the object, and said that he believed that if strenuous efforts were made, Alexandria would stand as good a show as any other city in the State to secure the celebration. The representatives of the press present were appointed secretaries of the meeting.

The following executive committee was appointed:

Alexandria City—William B. Smoot, C. C. Leadbeater, J. K. M. Norton, George R. Hill, M. B. Harlow, John W. May, Park Agnew, Isaac Eichberg, E. E. Downham, K. Kemper, Henry Strauss, J. M. The members of the finance committee of the city council and the sinking fund commissioners have recently held several meetings to consider the question of raising money to meet the payment of $32,000 of bonds which fall due next July, and also to pay for improvements at the city gas works, streets, etc. The bankers of the city were invited to be present and exchange views with them on the subject. A number of plans have been suggested for raising the money, and are now under consideration, but no definite plan has yet been adopted.

In the circuit court for the city C. C. Carlin, legal counsel for the board of police commissioners, today filed a petition of the board for a mandamus compelling the city council of Alexandria to appropriate the sum of $500 for the purpose of enabling the commissioners to perform the duties imposed upon the board by the city charter. This was brought about by council refusing to pay a bill of $500 for legal expenses incurred by the board in the injunction proceedings of the mayor vs. the board.

The Corporation Court was in session this morning, with Judge J. K. M. Norton presiding, and the following business was disposed of: City Council of Alexandria vs. J. T. Davis, decree entered confirming sale to J. H. Robey; M. B. Harlow vs. L. Fishermen in this vicinity are making active preparations for the opening of the shad and herring season, which will, if the weather permits, be commenced in about three weeks. Nearly all the shores along the lower river will be in full operation this season. Old fishermen predict this will be a prosperous season.

Washington's Birthday, Saturday next, will not be observed in this city with any ceremonies, as in former years. A number of clubs and fraternal organizations will have banquets at night, and many of the public schools will hold special exercises on that day, and essays on the life of Washington will be read. The Relief Hook and Ladder Company held a meeting tonight and made final arrangements for their banquet on that night.

At the request of the lady managers of the Belle Haven Hospital, the trustees held a meeting and decided to call it the Alexandria Hospital, instead of the Belle Haven Hospital, which is more fitting and appropriate. It was for many years known as the Alexandria Infirmary, and only recently the name was changed. The word Belle Haven met with much opposition, and hence the change of name.
