

MERRY WIT OF THE HERALD'S CARTOONISTS

EVERETT TRUE

BY CONDO

Freckles and His Friends

AT THAT THE MAIL MAN WILL HAVE TO FIGHT TO GET IT.

By Blosser

CHESTNUT CHARLIE

By BLOSSER

TOM SAWYER AND HUCKLEBERRY FINN

THE TOONERVILLE TROLLEY THAT MEETS ALL THE TRAINS.

By FONTAINE FOX.

Comedies of Camp Meade

"Mother, I think we've bin at the name of the camp or the commanding general!"

By Permission of the Estate of Samuel L. Clemens and the Mark Train Company. Copyright, 1918, by the Mark Train Company.

(Copyright, 1917, by the Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.)

SQUIRREL FOOD

HE'S TIRED OF SEEING BLACK CATS.

By AHERN

DOINGS OF THE DUFFS

TOM HAD THE DOPE ON WILBUR.

BY ALLMAN

He's a Lucky Guy.
"Hello, Bill, what makes you so happy?"
"Got a fine Christmas present."
"That so, what was it?"
"The peachy diamond ring."
"A beauty! Who gave it to you?"
"My old girl sent back her engagement ring."
"Gee, you always were a lucky guy!"

Rather Arid.
An easterner while traveling through Arizona observed the dry, dusty appearance of the roads and the country in general.
"Doesn't it ever rain around here?" he questioned one of the natives.
"Rain?" the native spat. "Rain? Why, say, friend, there's bullfrogs in this yer town more'n five-year-old that ain't learned to swim yet!"

Shuffled Off.
The young man led for a heart. The maid for a diamond played. The old man came down with a club. And the sexton used a spade.

Reducing the High Cost.
"If more land is forced into cultivation, clearly the price of raw materials must be reduced," writes Mary Fels in "Joseph Fels, His Life Work."
"This from a business point of view was an argument to which Mr. Fels attached great importance. In his own industry he found grave difficulties resulting from the possession by very few of all the available sources of supply.
"It was not that those sources were scanty and approaching exhaustion; supplies were deliberately restricted in order to enhance profits on a small output. Mr. Fels urged constantly that half the evils of the increased cost of living in recent years were due to this one tremendous fact, the 'cornering' as he put it, by a few, of the natural resources of which all men have need."
"He saw that if the full extent of those resources was brought into use the price of raw materials would be reduced with a clear effect upon the cost of living."