MOSLEMS, IN RIOT, STOP TO MASSACRE CHRISTIANS

Tales of Terrible Atrocities by Mohammedan Fanatics Come from the War Zone—Torture and Slay Prisoners.

Porte, in Statement, Acknowledges Defeat—Victorious Allies Almost at Gates of Constantinople—Unrest in Europe.

Special Cable to The Washington Herald.

Constantinople, Nov. 9.—In a long proclamation issued to-night, the ministry of the interior admits the Turks defeat and intimates that the fall of Constantinople is imminent. The proclamation says in part:

"The war with the Balkan states, through divine decree, has not had the satisfactory outcome desired. Thus the Turkish army has been compelled to withdraw to the lines of Tchatalja, where complete concentration is proceeding.

ENEMY AT GATES.

"The presence of the enemy at the gate of the capital affects greatly the tranquillity of the capital. While it is necessary to complete defensive measures, it is equally important to contemplate the possibility of failure there, even if the chance of failure is only slight."

The ministry holds the dissemination of "erroneous reports" responsible for the presence in the harbor of the foreign warships, and declares that further circulation of such reports "will be regarded as an act of treason, punishable in the most severe manner."

Moslems Commit Terrible Atrocities

London, Nov. 9.—Nearly every dispatch arriving in London from the scene of the Balkan war describes merciless massacres of Christians, including women and children, indicating that the Turks have not changed in this regard in the 500 years since they first became the terror of Southeast Europe. The beaten army in Macedonia pauses long enough in its flight before the victorious allies to burn villages, pillage, slaughter men, and carry off women.

Even the rabble in Thrace, plunging headlong to Constantinople after suffering dimastrous defeat by the Bulgarians, according to accounts, mutilate the bodies of the enemy and massacre the inhabitants of the country. From the Island of Psara, in the Aegean, now occupied by the Greeks, reports come that wild Moslem bands have been burning and pillaging just as in 1824, during the Greeks' war for independence. Inhabitants, numbering over 20,000, were massacred almost to a man by the Turks.

Andre Beaumont, special war correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph, who is going over the battle areas in a motor car, described the heart-rending incidents and scenes of terrible atrocities at almost every mile of his journey. He says:

FELLS OF ATROCITIES.

"In the course of my journey across the border I have come across innumerable reports of Turkish atrocities committed in towns and villages. I purposely mentioned as little as possible until I could have ocular proof of these, which I now have. I have seen graves of women and children recently tortured, and have spoken with survivors of the massacres.

"At Simetli I came across the first victims of the atrocities. Simetli is a small village with a few score houses grouped together. Every house has been abandoned. Only a few dogs remain howling and searching for food among the ruins. Dozens of houses were burned. The only inhabitants who remained were three Bulgarians. One told me that before making flight the Turkish regulars broke into his house, seized him by the neck, and threatened to cut his throat if he did not give them his money. The other told the same tale. He said that his life's savings were 600 groschen. He gave it, being glad to escape with his life.

"The third man was very poor, but he had two daughters still very young. As the Turks could get no money from him, they took his daughters. For several days I have been questioning fugitives from more than fifty villages on this side of the border who are wedding in rage and jabbers along the roads, many of them women, often carrying babies slung in shawls over their backs. They had left as soon as war was threatened because the Turks had told them that on the first outbreak of hostilities they would slaughter all Bulgars.

Prisoners' Throats Cut.

"Coming to Surlio I was shown the graves of nine Bulgars, seven men, one woman, and a boy of nine, who had been dragged that distance in chains from Djumaca, and their throats pitilessly cut on the roadside by Turkish irregulars; not by Bashibazouks, as there were none of these here. I went over to see the graves, over which a small wooden cross with an inscription had been erected by Bulgarian villagers. Near the cross I saw a pair woman's earrings, with a small child's garment as a sign of the on her back. The baby girl and the —Copyright by International News Syndicate.

The aged old fighting monarch of Montenegro, photographed on his favorite steed at the Montenegrin army headquarters in Podgoritza.

WILSON TO 'CLEAN HOUSE' IN JERSEY

President-elect Proposes to Put Through Democratic Programme.

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 9.—Gov. Wilson will devote the whole of next week to preparing the State of New Jersey for a house-cleaning. The President-elect announced to-night that he was pretty well up with his election-day correspondence, and that he would be free to look over his own State—now thoroughly Democratic in every branch—by Monday.

"I hope I will be far enough advanced with my correspondence by Monday to take up State business," he said. "I intend to devote the week to the State, preparatory to going away on my vacation. There are quite a number of appointments to be made. Many of them are small. Of course, it is too early to take up specific legislation at this time, but the State demands my attention and shall have it."

This is the first time that the Legislature has been Democratic in both branches since Woodrow Wilson's election as Governor. He has, naturally, been seriously handicapped in carrying out the reforms set forth in the platform upon which he was elected. Now he has a new platform, the one upon which the party won its fight in the State at the election, that contains an admirable programme.

To Clean House.

The Governor expects to have the situation in New Jersey so well in hand that when he returns from his vacation on December 16, he will be able to take up the task of reform with an intelligent conception of what is required. The Governor has already announced that he purposes making a model State of New Jersey before he goes to Washington to undertake the larger and more important work of economy.

Speaking of his vacation, upon which he will embark the latter part of next week, the Governor emphasized to-day the fact that he will not receive politicians, he will not talk politics, and that it will be useless for any one to undertake to pursuade him to do so.

"My friends have agreed to leave me alone during that period," he said. "If any one comes I shall not see him, that's all. Even McCombs and Mr. McAdoo understand this and they will remain away. I shall not talk politics under any circumstances, either for publication or for private consumption."

Watches Football Game.

The Governor was able to put in some hard work on his correspondence to-day because he locked himself in an upper room with his stenographer, and would not allow any one to disturb him.

"We are in a little room upstairs," he said, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

This afternoon the Governor went to University Field and watched the last half of the Princeton-Yale freshmen football game, which resulted in a tie, and the entire game between Princeton and New York University. The President-elect occupied a seat in the bleachers with his brother-in-law, Prof. Stockton Axson, of Princeton. Two rows above and just across the aisle were the Governor's daughters, Misses Jessie and Eleanor, accompanied by two Princeton students.

The Governor got a big cheer and a series of college yells when he appeared in the running, and thereafter was the center of attraction. Scores of graduates rushed up and grasped him. Robert Bridges, who was in the class of '77 with the Governor, and many years with the Century Magazine, was among those who greeted him. Bridges is now living in Orange, N. J., and is a constant visitor at the Governor's home.

DEMOCRATIC SENATOR FROM NEVADA CERTAIN

Reno, Nev. Nov. 9.—Late returns received to-night practically make it certain that K. Y. Pittman, Democrat, has been elected United States Senator over Judge Massey, Republican. Including Washoe County, the largest in the State, Pittman has 7,885 votes to 7,745 for Massey. The small districts yet to be heard from may cut down this lead a trifle, but not enough to elect Massey.

COLONEL PLANS TO STAY IN RING

Bull Moose Leader Confers with Pittsburg Editor Over Permanent Organization of Third Party.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Nov. 9.—In a conference with Alexander Moore, the Pittsburg Bull Moose editor, Col. Roosevelt to-day gave the assurance that he proposes to keep in touch with the Progressive party's affairs. While he prefers that some one else undertake the leadership, we will not refuse to assume it if the progressives insist. For the present, however, the colonel wants to rest.

Moore lunched with the colonel at Sagamore Hill, and told the colonel that the Pennsylvania Progressives are immensely tickled over the result in the Keystone State election, and they will keep their organization going for Congressional fight in 1914.

For the first time since his removal from Chicago to recover from the bullet wound, Col. Roosevelt to-day went horseback riding. The former President occupied himself in the morning with dictating letters touching upon the future of the Progressive party. He rode his favorite horse, Sirdar, for an hour, Mrs. Roosevelt going with him.

President-elect Wilson Is a Man of Many Titles

Wilson's mail since his recent election has just awakened him to the fact that he is a man of many titles, viz: President-elect Wilson, Gov. Wilson, Prof. Wilson, Dr. Wilson, because of the many degrees conferred on him, as well as plain Mr. Wilson. The high office he will soon take entitles him to be called "Your Excellency," his wife calls him Woodrow, his daughter "Father," and his brother calls him "Tommy." (See President-elect's first name, which he dropped some thirty odd

"I think any friendly friend would gladly call me Mr. Governor, and the newspapers will call me Mr. President, but other than these of me. My correspondence

"SQUIRT" ROOSEVELT TAKES TUMBLE

Boy Stunts Cowboy of Distinguished Relative After Losing Mount.

Struck by a low-hanging tree limb and knocked from the saddle, Robert Roosevelt, twelve-year-old son of Robert B. Roosevelt, cousin of Col. Theodore Roosevelt, yesterday afternoon sustained painful but not serious injuries, while galloping along a bridle path in Rock Creek Park.

Stiff and sore from the spill, the gritty lad insisted on mounting his horse and riding home alone, just as though he wanted to show that the nerve which was shown by the famous colonel after the recent shooting in Milwaukee is a family heritage to which all by the name of Roosevelt can lay claim.

With a number of small cuts and scratches beneath the chin, where the branch had scraped him, and his riding clothes covered with mud, young Robert entered the white marble residence of his father, 3009 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, with as much unconcern as though nothing had happened.

Not Seriously Hurt.

Questioned closely, Robert told the details of the accident reluctantly and then smiled at the fears of his parents when they insisted on summoning a physician. After examining the boy, the physician said Robert had escaped serious injury, but probably would be unable to ride for several days. Bruises and minor cuts were his most serious hurts.

Although usually accompanied by a groom, young Roosevelt rode away alone yesterday afternoon, astride of a mount that many an adult horseman would view with alarm. In Rock Creek Park's bridle paths, the boy, probably glad of an opportunity to ride without the detaining voice of a cautious groom, and exhilarated by the fresh autumnal air, put the horse to a gallop.

Swept from Saddle.

The sudden and unexpected bank of an auto horn did the rest, and in a few seconds the gallop was succeeded by the prostrations of a boy and a horse. Robert, bent on showing the nerve of the frightened horse, dodged the limb, only to pass beneath a low and [illegible] under the skin by a branch. Startled by the horse galloped on.

The boy ran after the horse and after a long search met Motorcycle Policeman Tennis, of the Seventh precinct station, who was leading the animal. Tennis had caught the horse after a fast ride. The policeman wanted to lead the horse until he could find a man to take the animal to the stable, but Robert demurred at thought of returning home on a street car.

DEMOCRATS MAY FORM COALITION

Senator Gore Intimates That Combination Will Be Effected on Tariff.

That the tariff programme of the Democratic party will be dependent in some degree at least upon the Progressives in the Senate was indicated last night by Senator Thomas P. Gore of Oklahoma, who returned to Washington yesterday after a strenuous summer utilized in electing Gov. Wilson.

Senator Gore believes that tariff revision will be the first and most important work of the new administration, and that the narrow Democratic majority in the Senate will necessitate an appeal to the Progressives for support in some of the schedules at least, providing the Democrats decide upon schedule by schedule revision instead of a blanket cut as in the case of the Payne-Aldrich bill.

"The tariff issue is paramount in the minds of the country, and undoubtedly will be the first work attempted by the Sixty-third Congress," said Mr. Gore last night. "Tariff revision will to some extent settle the trust question. It is a true, if trite, saying that the tariff is the mother of the trusts. Time was when to adjust the one would settle the other, but that time has gone by now, and it probably will require some additional legislation to adjust the trust question.

"We have, of course, a large majority in the House and will have a majority of two in the Senate, now that Oregon has elected a Democratic Senator."

Senator Gore was reminded that the Democrats had not always stuck together when the House was sending over tariff revision bills last session, and it was suggested that this majority of two might prove insufficient in the cases of some schedules, as, for instance, the sugar schedule, from which the House bill removed all duty. It was suggested in the case of this schedule that the two Louisiana Senators had voted with the Republicans or not at all, and that there might be two others—the Senators from Colorado—who would not care to have the duty entirely removed from the highly protected beet sugar industry in their State.

"Well," returned the Oklahoma senator, "the Progressives have shown a disposition to go along with us on tariff legislation."

"Will that not mean, in the case of the sugar schedule, that a compromise will have to be struck, such as resulted in the Bristow-Lodge bill last session," he was asked.

"I am not authorized to speak for the Progressives," he returned.

Mr. Gore did not care to hazard an opinion on the chances of an extra session. Gore is indicated technically [illegible] by [illegible] in favor of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]