Tennessee Prohibition Brings Unexpected Increase In Crime

Criminal Courts Crowded as Never Before—Majority of Indictments Are for Violations of Anti-Liquor Laws. Each Case Costs State $50.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Dec. 25.—Officials of the various criminal courts of Tennessee and students of crime statistics have been much concerned for several months over a large increase of infractions against the State-wide law, which is reflected by the work of grand juries. After having on the statutes of Tennessee for seven years a State-wide prohibition law, and a number of lesser laws designed and enacted to aid in the enforcement of the State-wide law, it was confidently expected by the advocates of prohibition, but doubted by opponents, that a material reduction would be noted in crime; but instead of a reduction there is a steady increase in practically every grade of crime, from public drunkenness to premeditated murder.

That grand juries have been busier than usual this fall is shown by an unprecedented large number of indictments in the more populous cities and counties. The criminal courts are clogged with business and juries and workhouses are full to overflowing. In some of the courts there have been taken to enlarge the facilities of workhouses in order to care for the greater number of criminals convicted in the courts of petty crimes and sentenced to the workhouse under a small offense.

Published lists of indictments show beyond doubt that fully fifty per cent of the indictments returned by grand juries throughout the State are for violations of the prohibition law, and for public drunkenness. Half of the time of the criminal courts is taken up trying these cases. The last legislature enacted a set of laws making it mandatory on the criminal courts to take cognizance of all petty infractions of the prohibition law. Every county in the State has its full quota of boot-leggers and public drunks, and the prosecutions of these offenders keep the courts in perpetual session. But there has also been an increase in all other crimes, such as murder, robbery and larceny.

Admit Crime Increase.

Hamilton County, which Chattanooga is the capital, is the third county in point of population in the State, being exceeded by Davidson and Shelby only. The grand jury for the fall term of the criminal court for the county returned more than 700 true bills, the largest number ever returned by a single jury in the history of the county. The average number of bills returned by grand jury in the county during a period of ten years is about 400. This fall's record of 700 indictments, therefore, shows an increase in crime over the average of about 75 per cent.

Judge S. D. McReynolds, of the criminal court, himself a prohibitionist, admitted that the work of this grand jury established the fact that crime in the county is increasing. He said that the increase in crime is not confined to the county, but is general throughout the State. He said that the increase in crime is not confined to the county, but is general throughout the State. ### Floral Tributes to a Famous Writer.

By DR. E. J. EDWARDS.

In August, 1871, I visited Westminster Abbey in London and found my way to the so-called Poet's Corner. I wanted to see the grave of Charles Dickens, and I wondered if I could find it easily especially in view of the fact that I had been told that superimposed over the grave was a flat stone upon which was inscribed Dickens' name and nothing else. It was not necessary to make any search, however. The most conspicuous object in Poet's Corner was a beautiful bunch of flowers which apparently lay upon the floor. Surrounding it were many small blossoms, indicating that someone had come to place flowers upon the grave. I felt sure that this was the grave of Dickens, and in a moment found that my surmise was correct. As I was going out of the Abbey, one of the guides, if that is the name of the officer, told me that children came every day and often persons of mature years, many women among them, who brought flowers to place upon Dickens' grave.

When Dickens was in New York on his second visit, he was a guest at the Westminster Hotel. That was also the New York home of Thackeray—certainly when visiting the United States for the second time, and I think also for the first time.

Of all of the experiences that Dickens met with while on his second visit to the United States in 1867, none touched him so deeply as the sending to him of flowers every day, sometimes humble little bouquets of violets or wild flowers, sometimes magnificent baskets of flowers. Almost all these were set down outside his door, so that he looked upon them when he opened it in the morning. But what especially pleased him was the fact that only rarely was there a card attached which showed from whom these tributes came, and whenever there was such acknowledgment it always came from some one whom Dickens knew. Much the larger part of these floral tributes came from people, many of them young people, who did not seek to identify themselves with the gift, but simply to show Dickens in what esteem and affection he was held."
