And heard the thunders roaring. Around Stonewall Jackson's way. I am not so full of fighting Nor half so full of fun, As back in the '60's, When I shouldered my old gun.

He is only a bit of a man, but as his voice rises to sing this chorus and he marches, in his own inimitable way, among the crowds which ever surround him, his scores of comrades come scurrying to join him in this chorus.

Although there are many verses to the timely song, all ending with the plea "Make one more gun for me," "Dan" Marsh remembers them all, as well as nearly a hundred of other wartime tunes.

His Confederate comrades of '61 and the folks in his home town, Medon, Tenn., call him "The Tennessee Mocking Bird," which appellation fits him snugly.

"Sing? Why song is as essential to D. C. Marsh, of the Seventieth of North Carolina as is food. More so, in fact, for after you become acquainted with him, he might confide to you the fact that many's the time he has sung for hours on a stretch, foregoing his meals.

"Dan" Marsh is not only a Confederate veteran, but he is also a son of a Confederate veteran. His father, James G. Marsh, was of the Third North Carolina Cavalry, under Fitz Lee, who fought in the vicinity of Washington throughout the long four years.

"Comrade Marsh is only sixty-nine years old and will not reach his seventieth until August 6. "Dan" has hardly slept a wink since he arrived on Sunday.

"Never do during reunion time," he explains. "Time's too precious."

No matter how broken his voice may seem at certain times, Comrade Marsh is as loathe to disappoint an eager crowd of listeners that he will draw his big, yellow lemon from his pocket—he always carries a lemon—and take the juice until he feels confident it's safe to "let 'er go."

One by one his comrades will slip away to bed as the hour grows late, but Comrade Marsh keeps right on singing as long as there is a single person who seems anxious to hear him.

Some one reluctantly suggested he had better "turn in" for some needed sleep as the "tent city" began filling up, but "Dan" scouted the idea.

"Sleep," he asked. "Why I don't need any sleep. Ain't stept to speak of since I been here. Let me tell you about the time I kept the watch for three nights without a wink between."

But these little incidents are merely incidents, slipped in while he is sucking his lemon.

"Some people don't see how I can sing when I have no teeth," Comrade Marsh remarked suddenly to his listeners.

"Don't believe you can," teased an old veteran who had just caught sight of his friend and was approaching.

Comrade Marsh, his eyes twinkling, looked up at his friend and with a tinge of impudence, began: "I never shirked from Sherman, As he galloped to the sea, And as this grand Union's gone to war. Make one more gun for me. I met them at Manassas, Them bully boys in gray."

Marsh Sings The Old Songs

"Make One More Gun for Me," Favorite Sentiment of the "Tennessee Mocking Bird," Who Cuts Sleep for Song.

Yes, sir, I fought with Stonewall, And blazed the way for Lee, As this grand Union's gone to war, Make one more gun for me!

But I fought with Stonewall Jackson, And blazed the way for Lee— And as this grand Union's gone to war, Make one more gun for me!

Many regulars from the United States army were among the crowd which surrounded Comrade Marsh. They seemed particularly pleased with the "Make One More Gun for Me" song.

After patiently waiting until the little group of listeners began to disperse, several young men of conspicuous age singled Mr. Marsh out and asked his advice.

"Shall we volunteer," one of the boys asked him, "or shall we wait until we are drafted?"

Comrade Marsh answered them with a little story from his own life when, as a lad of fifteen years, after a night of silent consideration under the stars he ran away from his home in Tennessee into North Carolina and volunteered his services.

"OPEN THE CHURCHES" BECOMES WAR POLICY

Pastors Invite Soldiers and Public to Rest and Prayer.

The dawning of today marked a new era for the majority of the churches of Washington.

In line with The Times' campaign to "Open the churches registration day and keep them open," scores of clergymen, representing every denomination, today inaugurated their new policy of making the public welcome at their houses of worship seven days a week, for the duration of the war at least.

In some cases, lack of finances, which prevents the employment of a regular sexton, has made the pastors unable to line up with the rest, but wherever it was possible, they have agreed to keep their churches open for the benefit of the young men who

Any woman not satisfied with her complexion can easily remove it and have a new one. The skin veil of stifling half-dead cuticle is an encumbrance and should be removed to give the fresh, vigorous, young skin underneath a chance to show itself and to breathe.
