EASTER

A STORMY SUNDAY—SERVICES AT CHRIST CHURCH.

The Easter services at the various Roman Catholic and Episcopal churches in New-York and Brooklyn were largely attended yesterday, notwithstanding the cold wind and drenching rain that made the weather unusually disagreeable. At Grace Church, Trinity Church, St. Ann's, St. Stephen's, and many others scarcely less known, the rare music, the exquisite flowers, the crowds of devout worshipers, and the spirit of religious gladness that prevailed, formed a striking contrast to the storm that raged persistently without.

At Christ Church, in Fifth-ave., the Rev. Dr. Hugh Miller Thompson, Rector, Easter was celebrated with a joyful solemnity happily befitting the day. As early as 6 a. m. the doors were opened, and, despite the darkness and the rain, the pews were nearly filled before the first service began, at 7 o'clock. The church was profusely adorned with flowers and lights; hot-house plants, red and white Spring blossoms, and fresh green leaves alternated with gas-jets around the chancel, and at either side of the altar shone the purer lights of pyramids of tapers. The cross placed on the altar was entwined with white roses, and over it was suspended a crown of the same flowers, while the words, "Glory be to God on High" were displayed in letters of flame in front of the organ gallery. At 7, precisely, the white-robed ministers took their places in the chancel amid the strains of the processional hymn sung by the choir. Dr. Thompson officiated, assisted by the curate, the Rev. S. F. Dunham. The service occupied over an hour, the following being the musical programme, which was admirably rendered under the direction of the organist, Dr. Cutler:

Chorus, "The Grand Hallelujah" from Handel's "Messiah." Trio, "Praise the Lord and Magnify His Name," Attila. Chorus, "The God of Israel." Recitat. Solo and Trio, "Ye Fields of Light," Millard. Te Deum (for both gallery and chancel choirs, 50 voices), Thomas, in G.

Holy Communion.—Introit, "Now is Christ Risen," Cutler; Sanctus, "Holy, holy, holy Lord God of Hosts, Heaven and earth are full of Thy glory," Hymnal Hymn 244, Hymns Ancient and Modern; Gloria in Excelsis (by 50 voices), Mozart.

The morning service, which began at 10½ a. m., attracted the largest crowd that ever assembled at Christ Church. Even before the service opened people were glad to find standing-room, and hundreds were obliged to go elsewhere. The musical programme was as follows:

Processional Hymn, 146; Alleluia Chorus, "Jesus Christ is Risen", Carl Maver; Easter Anthem; Proper Psalms; Te Deum (for 50 voices), Thomas, in G; Jubilate Chant; Litany Hymn; Anthem, "The Lord is Great" (Trio and Chorus), Handel; Responses to Commandments, "Glory be to Thee, O Lord!" Offertory, "Refulgent Gravity" Solo from Handel's Messiah; Offertory, Hymn 158; Holy Communion Hymn, 348.

The ceremonies were strictly in accordance with the ritual of the Episcopal Church. The lesson was from the Epistle of St. Paul, in which he puts forward arguments for the divinity of Christ from the fact of the resurrection; and the Gospel was from the 20th chapter of the Gospel of St. John. At the recital of the Creed the whole multitude rose simultaneously, and pronounced with powerful effect their profession of Christian belief. The Rector then called the attention of the congregation to the Easter offerings, for which he suggested many appropriate and praiseworthy objects, such as the Sunday-schools and the Western and foreign missions; and also referred to the duty of bringing infants to church to have them publicly baptized before the congregation. He expressed himself in favor of free churches, but said until some other arrangement was made he hoped all the pews would be rented, and meanwhile the evening service would always be free.

The sermon was delivered by Dr. Thompson, who stood in front of the altar, instead of at the reading desk, and preached without notes. After reading the first ten verses of the 37th chapter of Ezekiel, Dr. Thompson said that this was a prophecy of revelation. The prophet was carried by the spirit of God into a valley alone and there set down. It was a valley which had been the battle-ground of two vast armies in conflict, and the victory had been in part that of the Christian warriors of the dead, and not leaving the flesh untouched. Then came the beast of prey and obscene birds, and held carnival over the carcasses, and finally they too departed, and every living thing passed away, leaving the bones to bleach in the sun. Days rolled on and years elapsed, and the dried bones lay scattered and whitened over the rocks, and the grass, and the burning sand. All over the world there are many such valleys, where armies have met together in hate and wrath, and men were backed with swords or torn by shot and shell, and the earth wept tears of blood, and the heavens wept tears of pity over these valleys of woe. The voice of God comes to the prophet and asks him "son of man, dost thou think these bones shall live?" What shall we answer, standing as Ezekiel did? O God, thou canst answer, and no man can. Here is death and death only. It is the voice of God that comes to the prophet again and commands him, "Son of man, prophesy concerning these bones." And God's words go forth, and the prophet's voice rings out over the ghastly valley and through the rocks and the lonely caves God's message to the dead, and then behold bone joined to bone, and they were united, but they formed a skeleton yet. Then God commanded him "prophesy again," and the prophet's cry goes out, and the flesh comes all over the bones, and the sinews appear, and the skin covers all, and they run and stand upon their feet, an exceeding great army, and the rocks echo to the tramp of the feet of a host raised by God alive from the dead; and so the vision fades away, and the prophet stands alone with God.

Since the first sin was committed, the world is but a valley of dead bones. The prophet saw in small what is true of the whole surface of the earth. Everywhere they have been dying in millions, and those who walk the earth are but a handful to those whom the earth has swallowed and covered up. In the forests and woodlands, and on the sea-shore, and in the ocean's sleep on the caves of the seed, they lie an exceeding great army. The bones of men on the ocean and the white sands where the waves wash over them, are strewn with bleaching bones as the forest. They have gone down in ghastly heaps, and they have been buried in the trenches where men covered up their horrid work from the sight of the heavens. They have died, sweet babes not old enough to know a mother's love or lisp a father's name, and the silver haired and the middle-aged have descended with them to the common receptacle of the dead. They have gone, great men whose names will live in the world's history, and whose dust rested under the marble monuments that shall mark their deeds; and they have died, too, the countless multitude who lie beneath the sod, their names remembered or unknown; and so over the whole earth, the vision of the dried bones is spread before us.

It also comes among us, and we ask, "son of man, shall these bones live?" and the world asks it too. Cut down a tree, and there is hope that it will spring again; but if a man dies shall he live again? It has been asked from immemorial time, "Son of man, shall these bones live?" and the question has become a personal home question to all men. We do not speculate on that vast army of the dead, and ask, "Shall they live again?" No. Death is a special home acquaintance. He has come and set down by our fireside and talked with us all alone by ourselves. Not one of us that has not had familiar acquaintance with death. For us the special question is not "shall these bones live?" but "Shall this body live?" We stand by the coffin and the strange beauty of death has settled on the face of the loved one who has just departed. "Shall he live?" Oh, it is not a pale ghost we want, not a shadow or a phantom, but the very friend we have; we want the dead face back again. Heavens! how I loved him, and my heart broke over him! shall I see him never again? O, heaven and earth answer—shall he live? He was so grand, so generous, such an unsullied soul. God gave him to me for a day, and oh, shall this my friend live? I want him back from the rocks and the sand—from the stars, from the heaven—shall my friend live?

The little face had only just learned to wear an expression of welcome for me. The child was named with my name. The little face is there, with white flowers around it—shall it live? Not with little white wings floating it into the stillness and the darkness; but shall he live? O God! that human cry has gone up into heaven, that cry forever resounds, shall these bones live? We want the dead, we want the dear and beloved dead, and to-day we ask the Eternal Son of God, of whom Ezekiel and all the prophets were but types and shadows, the everlasting Son of Man, because the Son of God, "Shall these bones live?"

The Son of Man knows now and can answer, and he answers to us "Yes, they shall live, because this day death was conquered." The tears of the sepulcher were broken to-day, and its marble dashed to pieces, and out of the grave arose the awful Son of God priest and King, triumphant and death-conqueror. For us death reigns no longer as King, but comes as the usher of the black veil, if you will—to lead us in through the courts of the King's palace; no longer the skeleton but a dark-winged angel, the twin-brother of sleep, a sad-faced angel, but tender and kind. He comes as God's special messenger, and now bless him as the angel that leads us into the silence, but also into rest and happiness. And thus we know that we shall have times with us again, not souls only, but bodies, perfected bodies, the same and not the same, and we shall look as we note their eyes, and there will be gatherings and meetings of friends beyond the grave. When the Son of Man shall take his stand on the mountain side and cry to the sea to unlock its depths in his hand to bring back the dead, the dead shall arise and gather from the sea and land, and mountain cave and hill-side, and battle-field, and the lonely grave in the sands, and the earth shall open beneath the feet of this army of the risen and all be standing in the long procession of the ages to the final one, to be judged for the deeds done in the flesh in that hour, O Christ, may we rise to stand at thy right hand and hear thee forevermore.

THIEVES' RECORD.

Wm. Lesser, proprietor of a loan office, No. 151 Bowery-st., was closing his establishment on Friday evening, when a man asked for the loan of $5 currency on a $5 gold piece, which he detached from his chain. Lesser said that it was too late, but the stranger pleaded that he had no other resource. He finally consented, and handed the stranger a $5 bill, received the gold piece. At this moment another man, evidently an accomplice, entered and asked the other man to get small bills. Lesser turned to his safe, and while his attention was temporarily diverted, the second man picked up a few contributing those worth of watches and walked off with it. The theft was not discovered until his accomplice had gone. Five of the stolen watches were returned to Lesser on Saturday from an unknown quarter.

Wm. Woodruff, a colored porter in the employ of the New York and New-Haven Railroad Company, was given $7,000 in cash and about $10,000 in checks on Saturday to take to a bank. He carried the money and checks in a small bag, and was accompanied by another man. They hailed a Fourth-ave. and Broadway stage in front of the depot, and a well-dressed man entered the stage second-st., went out and beckoned to a man in a light wagon a short distance behind the stage. At Twenty-first-st. the man who had entered first suddenly opened the door with his knee, and at the same instant snatched the bag from Woodruff's hands. Before he could leave the stage he was seized by Woodruff's companion, and finding after a short struggle that he would be overpowered, he dropped the bag, and jumping from the stage leaped into the light wagon and was driven rapidly away.

A man professing to be mate of the fruit schooner Salvador, lying in Fulton slip, called, on Friday, on the wife of Capt. S. Newton, of the schooner, at her residence, No. 141 East Seventy-seventh-st., and said that her husband had been arrested and locked up. He added that Capt. Newton had sent him to procure $60 or $70 to pay a lawyer. In case she had not that amount in the house, she could give him, he said, jewels sufficient, when pledged, to supply the deficiency. Mrs. Newton was somewhat suspicious, and questioned him closely, but his answers were so straightforward that her suspicions were overcome, and she gave him $55 in money and several rings. She went down to the Beekman-st. Police Station, where her husband was said to be, and, failing to find him there, met him on board his vessel. The imposter had probably been employed on the fruit vessels, as he was evidently acquainted with Capt. Newton.

THE CASHIER OF THE MARKET SAVINGS BANK ARRESTED.

Ever since the failure of the Market Savings Bank, Henry R. Conklin, the defaulting Secretary, has spent nearly all his time in Canada, where he is alleged to have been sent by guilty confederates. For considerable time past Receiver Worth and depositors of the bank have been in correspondence with him. It was intended by Receiver Worth that Conklin should be induced to return to this city upon a guarantee of immunity from prosecution, and his testimony be used against his accomplices in this city and elsewhere; but Attorney-General Barlow and District-Attorney Garvin declined to pledge themselves in any form, and the project was abandoned. After further negotiations with Conklin it was resolved to arrest him at once, and accordingly at the instance of the attorneys of Receiver Worth he was arrested at Montreal while in bed, last Tuesday morning, and lodged in jail, where he now is, awaiting the formalities of the extradition treaty. It is believed that when he is brought hither he will tell all he knows about the affairs of the Bank to save himself from the penalties of the law. He has already stated that those officials who were loudest in their protestations of innocence were really the most culpable. Two defaults, amounting to $170,000, have been traced directly to Conklin.

DEATH FROM LAUGHING GAS.

The investigation in the case of the late Mrs. Ann O'Shaughnessy, who died while under the influence of nitrous oxide, or laughing gas, in the dental establishment of Dr. J. B. Newbrough at No. 128 West Thirty-fourth-st., was concluded on Saturday by Coroner Herrman, and the medical jury summoned by him. Dr. Alexander Buchanan of No. 345 West Thirtieth-st., E. P. Hoyt a dentist of No. 45 West Twenty-sixth-st., and Herrman Engelmann, chemist of the Board of Health, gave testimony, after which the following verdict was rendered:

We find that Mrs. Ann O'Shaughnessy came to her death from asphyxia or apnoea, as evidenced by the symptoms manifested to the patient before death, and the conditions found at the post-mortem, the asphyxia having, in our opinion, been induced by the inhalation of gas administered. The jury further agree in the opinion that any other than the prescribed method or proportion of nitrous oxide gas as to temperature for generation and compression rendering it liquefied, is to be regarded as a careless method of manufacture. In this particular we regard the apparatus used by Mr. Newbrough as imperfect. Furthermore, we regard the administration of nitrous oxide gas as reckless where such administration is an experiment upon the patient, which it must be, where there is not a positive certainty as to the chemical purity of the gas, and ignorance in the administrator of the personal condition of the patient and his physiological effects manifested by anæsthesia. Furthermore, we regard it as an extreme recklessness that the administration of nitrous oxide gas should have a knowledge of the application of remedies appropriated to alarming conditions in emergencies, not being supplied with such agents.

SHIP CANAL ACROSS THE AMERICAN ISTHMUS.

NEW-YORK, Feb. 27, 1872.

To the President: The United States are deeply concerned in all movements aimed at the creation of new or the deflection of ancient lines of traffic, and especially in those for the creation of an Interoceanic Ship Canal across the American Isthmus at some point best adapted to the requirements of her commerce and to the commanding of the trade between Western Europe and Eastern Asia.

Within the last few years numerous surveys and explorations have been made with this object in view, and reports, with maps, plans and estimates of cost have been made in great detail, and are now in the possession of the Government, and will doubtless furnish an amount of data sufficient to enable a just comparison of the relative advantages of the proposed routes, and to authorize, if not call, for such an investigation. Being, in common with their fellow-citizens of the United States, deeply interested in the questions involved, the undersigned have the honor to request that the President will constitute a Commission to be composed of five distinguished officers of high rank, viz: two from the Army, two from the Navy, and one from the Coast Survey of the United States, to which may be referred the reports and accompanying maps and documents of the several United States and other surveys and explorations of the American Isthmus, and that the Commission may be requested to make a careful and complete analysis of the same, and report whether or not such surveys and explorations determine the practicability of constructing, at a reasonable cost, a ship canal across the American Isthmus, and if so, what point or points are the most eligible for such a route and the most advantageous to the United States. We have the honor to be, Sir, your obedient servants,

Navy, Commissioners to examine and consider all surveys, plans, proposals or suggestions of routes of communication by canal or water connection between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, across, over or near the Isthmus connecting North and South America, which have already been submitted, or which may be hereafter submitted, to the President during the pendency of their appointment, or which may be referred to them by the President, and to report, in writing, their conclusions, and the result of such examination, to the President, with their opinion as to the probable cost and practicability of such route or plan, and such other matters in connection therewith, as they may think proper and pertinent. I have the honor to be, gentlemen, your obedient servant, HAMILTON FISH.
