

LITERARY.

Dr. Holland's forthcoming poem, "The Marble Prophecy," will be published by Scribner, Armstrong, & Co., in a few days. The poet, looking at the famous old group, Læocœon, in the Vatican, thus apostrophizes that "marble prophecy":

A voice from out the world's experience, Spoken of all the generations past To all the generations to come, Upon the marble monsters that enfold In unrelaxing, unrelenting coils, The awful energies and power of France Down in thy quivering bow, while still thy might In fierce convulsion lies the fatal wench, Wouldst thou hadst died, I am overwhelmed With strange sympathy of kindred pain, And see through gathering tears the tragedy, The curse and conflict of a ruined race!

The whole poem, indeed, is inspired by that wonderful group, whose inception and latter-day revelation are described. Among the minor poems are many which the public are not at all familiar, while others are as popular as they are beautiful, especially, for instance, "Daniel Gray," "Graduation," "The Heart of the War," &c.
