ADVANCES IN THE MARKET

Good Openings in Stocks Followed by Reactions.

Trading in Fair Volume—Sugar Refining Strong and Active—People's Gas Develops an Uncertain Tone. Anaconda Copper Rises Sharply. Traction Shares Generally Heavy.

NEW YORK, March 12.—Material advances were scored in the stock market this morning at the opening of business and the dealings were in very fair volume with interest well distributed throughout the market. Sugar Refining was particularly strong and active, but after the initial dealings, the stock developed a somewhat reactionary tendency. People's Gas, also, had an uncertain tone after a strong opening.

The industrial quarter was generally strong with active dealings in American Steel and Wire, Federal Steel and the tobacco stocks. Anaconda Mining advanced very sharply in the initial dealings. Active features of the railway list were Missouri Pacific, Union Pacific, the granger shares and Pennsylvania. The local traction issues were generally heavy, notably Metropolitan Street Railway. There was little that was new bearing on the market developed over Sunday, but sentiment seemed to be cheerful and interest was again keen in the expected operations of the new Currency law. The London market was reported buoyant both on the success of the British forces in Africa and on the heavy over-subscriptions to the British loan. Foreign houses were buyers to a main extent in this market.

The opening of the Stock Market this morning was of a much better tone than any recent session has shown, prices at the first quotations being fractionally above the close last Saturday, and the business during the first hour showing a steady advance all over the list. The grangers, the coalers, the Pacific and Southern securities and other railway stocks generally all were pushed up with covering of shorts and some buying for the long account. The industrials, too, were more buoyant than at any time last week, and despite a continuance of the bearish gossip regarding the effect of the franchise tax, the traction stocks were disposed to advance with the remainder of the list. The monetary buoyancy may be the beginning of an important upward movement, based on the effect of the Currency bill, and the many other favorable items in the situation, or it may be only a temporary spurt, due largely to covering. Optimistic people express great hopes that after the long period of deadness the leaders and the public will come into the market now and take advantage of the fine intrinsic conditions prevailing. London continues to be a buyer of American securities, the London market being buoyed up continually by the fine reports of British successes in South Africa and the talk of the ending of the war. Money will undoubtedly be easy in a few days, even if before the effect of the Currency law is felt there may be a day or two of higher interest rates, owing to the less satisfactory condition of the New York banks.

The gross earnings of Missouri Pacific for the first week of March increased $57,000 and since January 1, increased $589,115. The meeting of the Missouri Pacific people will take place tomorrow. There is some talk of a dividend for the stock, but it is said on good authority that there will be no declaration at the present time. The statement of the company will be an excellent one, however, and it makes certain a dividend in the near future.

Rocking Valley gross earnings for the week increased $24,052, and since January 1, increased $272,880. Wabash gross increased for the week $14,495 and since July 1, increased $1,609,198.

Whooping Cough.

Two years ago my little three-year-old boy had the whooping-cough, and after several physicians had prescribed for him without giving him relief, I prevailed on my wife to try a twenty-five cent bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The first dose had the desired effect, and within forty-eight hours he was entirely relieved of all cough. I consider this remedy the best on the market, especially for children, and recommend it all times. W. L. Ferguson, Druggist, Bolton, Miss. AN ESKIMO TRIBE FOUND

Unknown Indians Discovered on a Hudson Bay Island.

A Primitive Race That Scientists Believe Inhabited Their Insular Home Before Christopher Columbus Sailed Westward—First Saw Other People About a Year Ago.

NEW YORK, March 12.—On a big island in Hudson's Bay a hitherto unknown tribe of Eskimo has been found.

Whalers discovered them, and the authorities at the Museum of Natural History, hearing the news, sent Capt. C. Cromer to investigate them. How well his work has been done is evidenced by the glass cases now at the museum, filled with the strangest exhibit that ever came even from the strange northland.

Until the last few months these people had never seen a white man. The island which they inhabit is called Southampton Island, and is almost as large as the State of Maine. It is at the northwestern end of Hudson's Bay. For centuries this tribe has not had the slightest communication with other Eskimo. When discovered they were still living in the stone age, and knew no metals until they were introduced within a year by visiting whalers, and today they live just as they did when they first emigrated—from no one knows where. Their residence probably antedates the discovery of America by Columbus.

They speak a dialect different from that of any other known tribe. Their huts are built of the skulls and jaws of whales, covered over with skins of animals. Snow huts are the fashion among other Eskimo.

In the middle of their primitive dwelling stands the stone lamp (raised a little from the ground) which lights the home, heats it, cooks the food, serves for melting snow, drying clothes, and the perfecting of some of their weapons and implements. Among the Greenland Eskimo this lamp is hollowed out of soapstone, but on Southampton Island the lamp is made of a flat piece of limestone, around the edge of which narrow pieces of limestone are glued. Their pots are made of the same material, one slab serving as the bottom and four others for the ends and sides of the queerest square pot ever made. The glue is made of deer's blood, grease, and fish roe. One glance at the inside of one of these pots lined with this pitchy mass is enough to take away a white man's appetite for a week.

Into the limestone lamp, which is an oval, a foot or so wide and about two inches deep, is put oil from whale blubber. The wick is a piece of moss. The pot is placed over the lamp on a support, on which hangs a piece of blubber which melts from the heat and feeds the lamp continually.

The dress of these people also differs in design from that of other Eskimo. The women's clothing is made of the skin of the reindeer, sewed skillfully and neatly with needles of bone and sinews instead of thread. The chief peculiarity lies in four bags, two on the shoulders and two on the legs. No one can see any use in these bags, for they are sewn shut, but it is a tradition that formerly they were much larger and were then used for carrying the children in. The style still persists, however, though children are no longer carried in this fashion. Another peculiarity of feminine fashion on Southampton Island is the head dress. Nothing like it has been discovered the world over. The women plait their hair in two plaits, parting the hair in the middle. The ends of these plaits are then brought over the shoulders and introduced into two tubes of deerskin, about an inch in diameter and two feet long. From the lower end of these tubes hang whisps of hair, suggesting that the plaits—which are actually only long enough to teach the upper end of the tubes—are so long that they run through the tubes and hang out a little. Even among Eskimo women there is "glory in the hair," and the fashion holds, though every one understands the polite fiction.

The members of this tribe live altogether by fishing and hunting, the whale being the chief article of diet. The bone harpoons they use are tipped with chipped flints, as well as their arrows and spears. The ingenuity with which they utilize the whalebone is most surprising. Cups and buckets are made of it by bending it round and sewing on the bottoms. Whalebone serves them for weapons and implements of utility. They even press it into service for making tobogganlike sleds. Some of their sledges are made of walrus tusks as runners and with deer's antlers as crosspieces. On so large an island as theirs there is an abundance of game, such as the seal, walrus and caribou. There are only fifty-eight persons in the whole tribe, so it is probable that it has decreased largely during the centuries.

The island is thirty miles away from the nearest point on the shore of Hudson Bay, where there is a colony of Eskimos, and it is only once in a very long time that this strait freezes over. The tribe cherishes a tradition that about seventy-five years ago this happened, and two hunters from the mainland visited them, though the visitors were as much astonished as their hosts to know that there were other men on earth. Each tribe believed that they were the only people in existence. Strangers never visited them again, nor did they make any attempt to return the call.

In the large amount of valuable material which Captain Cromer has brought back with him are many curious implements and weapons. The huge bone earrings with long pendants are primitive jewelry indeed. There are bows and arrows with flint points or heads, and harpoons of bone similarly pointed with stone. Combs carved out of ivory, walrus tusks, and many curious ivory ornaments and carvings are there; pipes made of stone, bone needles, sinew thread, raw hide dog whips, arrow heads wrapped in intestine, and carried in this fashion to replace those that might be lost in the chase. They also carve in slate, and stone, and some of the quaint little figures of polar bears, musk ox, reindeer and walrus, as well as of human beings, will interest every beholder.

The arrangement of all the exhibit is not yet completed, and it will probably be several weeks at least before this curious collection is placed before the wondering eyes of the New York public; but when it is, a special visit to the museum for its study will repay everyone.

Express your satisfaction of Heurich's Maerzen, Senate, and Lager by calling for these beers by their names instead of "dark" and "light."
