

A GREAT NAVAL PAGEANT.

THE WHITE SQUADRON IN ENGLISH WATERS—APPROACHING FESTIVITIES AT KIEL.

Southampton, June 6.—Southampton has been an American port this week. The White Squadron, with four ships and fifteen hundred men, has been at anchor two or three miles from the bustling Watergate Pier, and hundreds of Americans have come down from London to visit it.

The American and Italian warships, eight in all, present a beautiful spectacle for incoming travelers passing from the Solent into Southampton Water. The San Francisco, the flagship, lies nearest the town, with the Marlborough close by, and the New-York and Columbia further out.

Admiral Kirkland had been hoping to sail for Copenhagen by the middle of the week, but dispatches from Berlin announcing that a German official had started for Southampton to explain the programme for the Kiel manoeuvres have detained him.

Admiral Kirkland's junior officers are enjoying their European cruise and looking forward with pleasurable anticipation to a splendid naval pageant at Kiel.

The Kiel celebration will bring together the largest number of modern warships ever assembled in any port. There will be at least 125 vessels of all classes, and as many as twenty-two floating batteries ever constructed.

preconcerted arrangement between the Foreign Offices of Paris and St. Petersburg, each country is to be represented by the same number of ships of corresponding type.

The festivities will open on June 19 with banquets, a carnival and illuminations in Hamburg. Then will follow on the next day the Journey through the Baltic Canal by the Emperor's yacht and representative ships of various nations.

The Baltic Canal, which will be opened for public traffic on July 1, is more remarkable as a financial than as an engineering enterprise. It has been built in seven years, and the actual cost has not exceeded the estimates.

Several singers who can delight any audience have volunteered their services for the concert which is to take place at 3 p. m. to-day in the gallery of the American Art Association.
