

NON-CATHOLICS HONOR JOHN, CARDINAL FARLEY

Give Dinner and Reception for His Eminence and Offer Engrossed Resolutions.

CARDINAL MUCH PLEASED

Speakers, Including Mayor and Oscar S. Straus, Rejoice That Days of Bigotry Are Gone—Taft Sends Letter.

With Herman A. Metz as chairman and toastmaster, a committee of representative citizens, non-Catholics, gave a dinner and reception for Cardinal Farley last night at the Waldorf, to express the pleasure with which New Yorkers of other than his own faith greeted his recent election.

Each member of the committee, which included many of the best known men in the city, brought with him one guest, making in all a gathering of about one hundred and fifty.

Governor Dix, Mayor Gaynor, Oscar S. Straus and Dr. John H. Finley were the speakers, and after they had offered their felicitations to his eminence, Dr. Edwin Zimmerman, secretary of the committee which arranged the affair, gave a framed set of engrossed resolutions, which stood about four feet high, to the Cardinal in his behalf.

Cardinal Farley responded briefly, expressing both his pleasure at the opportunity they had afforded him to thank them and his diffidence at having to speak at all, while his heart was full from their kindness.

"On occasion," he said, "in the first I can recall in a very long time in which I have felt such diffidence, together with such great pleasure, in rising to return thanks. It is a pleasure because I feel that I know the spirit of this audience. I am well aware that this comes to me not as an afterthought upon your part, following the greeting upon my return. I learned of your generous intentions long before I left Rome. I took occasion, and I was proud to do it—proud of the broadmindedness of my fellow citizens—to mention it to a number of my fellow cardinals and distinguished ecclesiastics, at a gathering in the Eternal City, and the applause with which it was greeted there would have surprised you."

The Cardinal mentioned that the applause that greeted him at the Vatican, explaining that to him the applause of that body came from a real appreciation of the true American spirit.

"It is the true American spirit," he continued, "to interpret kindly our fellow citizens wherever we see sincerity in their character. I live, I hope, for my God and for my country. I could not strive for the uplift of my own people without uplifting my country."

Even when he had first been conveyed to him, the Cardinal said, he had not dreamed of a reception of such a diverse gathering as he saw before him. It pleased him to see such an evidence of the broadmindedness of New York City and of the country as was typified by the audience which greeted him. With the public reception on his landing, he said, it was a foregone conclusion that a gathering of his own flock to express their pleasure that their shepherd had been honored by the Supreme Pontiff of their faith. The spirit which actuated this entertainment, the Cardinal added, had been a subject of pleasure to the Holy Father, than whom no one valued more highly the peace which the Church enjoyed in America.

"May the spirit that is over this banquet prevail always," he said in closing, "and may the demon of bigotry be wiped away forever."

Precious speakers, particularly Mayor Gaynor and Oscar S. Straus, had touched on the same line of thought. Each had pointed out that bigotry, which had once dominated New York City, was diminishing and almost obsolete.

The Mayor reviewed the act of his predecessor, Peter Stuyvesant, in forbidding a becloud of Jews to land until they had furnished bonds that they would not become a public charge, and Mr. Straus, commenting on the Mayor's remarks, pointed out that it was a New Yorker of a later generation, but of the same race as Stuyvesant, President Roosevelt, who most authoritatively rebuked that spirit of bigotry when the question of religion was raised against the then President-elect Taft.

Chairman Metz told the diners that letters had been received from President Taft and a very few of the committee members regretting their inability to be present. Among them were J. Pierpont Morgan, James G. Cannon, Paul D. Cravath, Francis Lynde Stetson, the Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler.

He read only the letter of the President, which follows:

White House, Washington, Jan. 26, 1912.

My dear Mr. Metz: I regret I am unable to be present at the non-sectarian dinner to be given in congratulation of Cardinal Farley on his high rank of cardinal in the Roman Catholic Church. The non-denominational character of the dinner is an indication of the great progress which has been made in American society in the direction of mutual tolerance and of the closer brotherhood among those who support and maintain different religious faiths and organizations.

In its sturdy support of law and order and its recognition of the high rank of the good influence of the Catholic Church in our community. That the head of the great progress which has been made in American society in the direction of mutual tolerance and of the closer brotherhood among those who support and maintain different religious faiths and organizations.

Please accept my compliments and felicitations to Cardinal Farley, with whose friendship I have been honored for a number of years and believe me, as ever, sincerely yours, WILLIAM H. TAFT.

To Hon. Herman A. Metz, No. 12 Madison street, New York City.

Governor Dix reviewed the events of Cardinal Farley's seventy years of life, emphasizing always the personal side of the guest of honor. As he wove the story of the Cardinal's life into the story of progress of the last seventy years, he brought out chiefly his impression that Cardinal Farley had been actually always by a true desire to serve humanity.

"It is uncertain to my mind whether the humble or the exalted station possesses the greater happiness for the individual," he said, "for the higher the place, the greater the responsibility. The exercise of responsibility always brings trials to the conscience in man, and the conscience in man is the barometer of his happiness. To my mind the quality of humility, in the man in lowly station or in the man in exalted station, is the bulwark of his abilities for service and the inspiration of his happiness."

"We honor to-night a man who is the embodiment of humility. To-night the personal aspect of Cardinal Farley, as it photographs itself upon our eyes and minds, leaves upon us the indelible impression of humility—the honest desire to serve humanity."

Mayor Gaynor, in his own typical phrases, expressed his wonder at the broad, cosmopolitan aspect of the gathering.

"It is the most extraordinary dinner ever held," said the Mayor, "where was the like ever held? I'm sure I don't know. Do any of you know? These men represent all that is most worthy in the city of New York, all that is most worthy in religion, in politics, in literature, in banking and in commerce."

"The Mayor found that the sole impulse of the authorities was in the character of the man they honored. Had the Cardinal been of an arduous or a controversial nature, such a gathering would not have been possible."

"During all his pastorate here," said the Mayor, "I am told that nobody is able to remember that he has ever said an acrimonious thing about any religion or any human being."

Going back into the past the Mayor explained that New York had not always been so liberal and broad in her thought. He related the incident of Peter Stuyvesant's administration, and declared that the same spirit survived but barely. He had received just three letters, three out of several millions of people," said the Mayor, who objected to the parade of welcome with which the Cardinal was greeted.

As an instance of this bigotry which still survived, the Mayor quoted a pointed incident of recent political news, though without the mention of a name.

"There are people now, but only a few," he said, "and none here, I'm sure, who say that all the Italians should be sent out of the country at once. If that could happen they would very soon come to the conclusion that this country would stand still."

Cardinal Farley, the Mayor said in conclusion, had seen the growth of this broadmindedness which now characterized the American people.

"His heart is as broad as the city, with the horizon of the world," said Mayor Gaynor, "before nothing was ever more fitting than for people not of his faith to come and to honor to him and to themselves by thus greeting him."
